PREFACE.

A CHAPTER title in the Codex Frisianus, 'Fundit Vínland góða' [Wineland the Good found], which has been reproduced in enlarged facsimile on the cover, has suggested the title for this book. The chapter which this title heads will be found on page 14. The Icelandic text there cited has been copied directly from the original, and this method has also been pursued in the other cases where citations of strictly historical matter have been made. In printing these citations, accents, punctuation and capital letters have been added, and supplied contractions have been printed in italics. Passages which have not been regarded as clearly historical have also been given in the original, but in this case it has been deemed sufficient to print after the best published texts. Icelandic proper names, where they occur in the translations, have been somewhat altered from their correct form, to the end that they might appear less strange to the English reader. This liberty has been taken with less hesitancy since it has been possible to give these names in their proper forms in the Index.

To the kindness of Dr. Bruun, Librarian of the Royal Library of Copenhagen, I am indebted for the privilege which has made the photographic reproduction of the Wineland History of the Flatey Book possible. I am under like obligation to the Arna-Magnæan Legation for the use, for a similar purpose, of the manuscripts AM.<sup>1</sup> 557 4to and 544 4to. To one member of the Arna-Magnæan Legation, Dr. Kristian Kålund, I am under still further obligation for very many favours, which his profound acquaintance with

Icelandic manuscripts, and especially with those in his charge as Librarian of the Arna-Magnæan Library, have rendered particularly valuable. To Professor Gustav Storm I feel myself peculiarly indebted for the kindly help, which he so freely tendered me at a time when the courtesy was extended at the expense of his own personal engagements. My thanks are also due to Dr. Finnur Jónsson, for his supervision of the photographing of the Arna-Magnæan manuscripts, and for other friendly acts. I am likewise under obligation to Captain Holm, of the Danish Navy, and Captain Phythian, of the United States Navy, for help, which finds more particular mention elsewhere. Finally and especially, I owe to Dr. Valtýr Guðmundsson an expression of the appreciation I feel for his frequent and ever ready assistance, and particularly for his review of the proofs of the Icelandic texts.

The kindness which these friends have shown me has contributed in no small degree to the pleasure which the making of these pages has afforded.

THE FINDING OF WINELAND THE GOOD.

INTRODUCTORY.

THE Icelandic discovery of America was first announced, in print, more than two centuries and a half ago. Within the past fifty years of this period, the discovery has attracted more general attention than during all of the interval preceding,—a fact, which is no doubt traceable to the publication, in 1837, of a comprehensive work upon the subject prepared by the Danish scholar, Carl Christian Rafn. Although it is now more than half a century since this book was published, Rafn is still very generally regarded as the standard authority upon the subject of which he treats. But his zeal in promulgating the discovery seriously prejudiced his judgment. His chief fault was the heedless confusing of all of the material bearing directly or indirectly upon his theme,—the failure to winnow the sound historical material from that which is unsubstantiated. Rafn offered numerous explanations of the texts which his work contained, and propounded many dubious theories and hazardous conjectures. With these the authors, who have founded their investigations upon his work, have more concerned themselves than with the texts of the original documents. If less effort had been applied to the dissemination and defence of fantastic speculations, and more to the determination of the exact nature of the facts which have been preserved in the Icelandic records, the discovery should not have failed to be accepted as clearly established by sound historical data. Upon any other hypothesis than this it is difficult to account for the disposition American historians have shown to treat the Icelandic discovery as possible, from conjectural causes, rather than as determined by the historical records preserved by the fellow-countrymen of the discoverers.

Bancroft, in his History of the United States, gave form to this tendency many years ago, when he stated, that :

‘The story of the colonization of America by Northmen rests on narratives mythological in form, and obscure in meaning, ancient yet not contemporary<sup>1</sup>. The intrepid mariners who colonized Greenland could easily have extended their voyages to Labrador, and have explored the coasts to the south of it. No clear historic evidence establishes the natural probability that they accomplished the passage, and no vestige of their presence on our continent has been found<sup>2</sup>.’

The latest historian of America, traversing the same field, virtually iterates this conclusion, when he says :

‘The extremely probable and almost necessary pre-Columbian knowledge of the north-eastern parts of America follows from the venturesome spirit of the mariners of those seas for fish and traffic, and from the easy transitions from coast to coast by which they would have been lured to meet more southerly climes. The chances from such natural causes are quite as strong an argument in favor of the early Northmen venturings as the somewhat questionable representations of the Sagas<sup>3</sup>.’

The same writer states, elsewhere, in this connection, that :

‘Everywhere else where the Northmen went they left proofs of this occupation on the soil, but nowhere in America, except on an island on the east shore of Baffin’s Bay, has any authentic runic inscription been found outside of Greenland<sup>4</sup>.’

If the authenticity of the Icelandic discovery of America is to be determined by runic inscriptions or other archæological remains left by the discoverers, it is altogether probable that the discovery will never be confirmed. The application of this same test, however, would render the discovery of Iceland very problematical. The testimony is the same in both cases, the essential difference between the two discoveries being, after all, that the one led to practical results, while the other, apparently, did not (1). The absence of any Icelandic remains south of Baffin’s Bay makes neither for nor against the credibility of the Icelandic discovery,—although it may be said, that it is hardly reasonable to expect that, in the brief period of their sojourn, the explorers would have left any buildings or implements behind them, which would be likely to survive the ravages of the nine centuries that have elapsed since the discovery.

<sup>1</sup> If by colonization is meant the permanent settlement or continuous occupation of the country for a long series of years, it should be noted that its story rests on the fertile imaginations of comparatively recent editors, not upon the original Icelandic records.

The really important issue, which is raised by the paragraphs quoted, is the broader one of the credibility of the Icelandic records<sup>1</sup>. These records, in so far as they relate to the discovery, disentangled from wild theories and vague assumptions, would seem to speak best for themselves. It is true that Icelandic historical sagas do differ from the historical works of other lands, but this difference is one of form. The Icelandic saga is peculiarly distinguished for the presentation of events in a simple, straightforward manner, without embellishment or commentary by the author. Fabulous sagas there are in Icelandic literature, but this literature is by no means unique in the possession of works both of history and romance, nor has it been customary to regard works of fiction as discrediting the historical narratives of a people which has created both. It is possible to discriminate these two varieties of literary creation in other languages, it is no less possible in Icelandic. There is, indeed, no clear reason why the statements of an historical saga should be called in question, where these statements are logically consistent and collaterally confirmed.

The information contained in Icelandic literature relative to the discovery of America by the Icelanders, has been brought together here, and an attempt has been made to trace the history of each of the elder manuscripts containing this information. Inconsistencies have been noted, and discriminations made in the material, so far as the facts have seemed to warrant, and especially has an effort been made to avoid any possibility of confusion between expressions of opinion and the facts.

It is not altogether consistent with the plan of this book, to suggest what seems to be established by the documents which it presents, these documents being offered to bear witness for themselves; but a brief recapitulation of the conclusions to which a study of the documents has led, may not be amiss, since these conclusions differ radically, in many respects, from the views advanced by Rafn and his followers, and are offered with a view to point further enquiry, rather than to supplant it.

The eldest surviving manuscript containing an account of the discovery of Wineland the Good, as the southernmost land reached by the Icelandic discoverers was called, was written not later than 1334. This, and a more recent manuscript containing virtually the same saga, present the most cogent and consistent account of the discovery which has been preserved. Many of the important incidents therein set forth are confirmed by other Icelandic records of contemporary events, and the information which this saga affords is simply, naturally and intelligibly detailed. This information is of such a character, that it is natural to suppose that it was derived from the statements of those who had themselves visited the lands described: it is not conceivable from what other source it could have been obtained, and, except its author was gifted with unparalleled prescience, it could not have been a fabrication. According to this history, for such it clearly is, Wineland was discovered by a son of Eric Thorvaldsson, called the Red, the first Icelandic explorer and colonist of Greenland. This son, whose name was Leif, returning from a voyage to Norway, probably not later than the year 1000, was driven out of the direct track to Greenland, and came upon a country of which he had previously had no knowledge. He returned thence to Greenland, and reported what he had found, and an ineffectual attempt was made soon after to reach this strange land again. A few years later one Thorfinn Thordarson, called Karlsefni, an Icelander, who had recently arrived in Greenland, determined to renew the effort to find and explore the unknown country which Leif had seen. He organized an expedition and sailed away from Greenland toward the south-west. He first sighted a barren land, which, because of the large flat stones that lay strewn upon its surface, received the name of Helluland. Continuing thence, with winds from the north, the explorers next found a wooded land, to which they gave the name of Markland, from its trees, which, to these inhabitants of a treeless land, were a sufficiently distinguishing characteristic. Proceeding thence, they next descried a coast-land, along which they sailed, having the land upon their starboard side. The first portion of this land-fall proved to be a long, sandy shore, but when they had followed it for some time, they found it indented with bays and creeks, and in one of these they stopped, and sent two of their company inland to explore the country. These explorers, when they returned, brought with them, the one a bunch of grapes, the other an ear of wild ['self-sown'] grain. They hoisted anchor then, and sailed on until they came to a bay, at the mouth of which was an island with strong currents flowing about it. They laid their course into the bay, and, being pleased with the country thereabouts, decided to remain there the first winter, which proved to be a severe one. In the following year, Karlsefni, with the greater portion of his company, continued the advance southward, halting finally at a river, which flowed down from the land into a lake and thence into the sea. About the mouth of this river was shoal water, and it could only be entered at flood-tide; they proceeded up the river with their ship, and established themselves not far from the sea, and remained here throughout the second winter. There were woods here, and in the low-lands fields of wild 'wheat,' and on the ridges grapes growing wild. Here for the first time they encountered the inhabitants of the country, to whom they gave the name of Skrellings (Skraelingjar), a name which seems to bear evidence of their opprobrium. In the spring after their arrival at this spot, they were visited for the second time by the Skrellings, with whom they now engaged in barter; their visitors, however, becoming alarmed at the bellowing of a bull, which Karlsefni had brought with him, fled to their skin-canoes and rowed away. For three weeks after this, nothing was seen of the natives; but, at the end of this interval, they returned in great numbers and gave battle to Karlsefni and his companions. The Skrellings finally withdrew, having lost several of their number, while two of Karlsefni's men had fallen in the affray. The explorers, although they were well content with the country, decided, after this experience, that it would be unwise for them to attempt to remain in that region longer, and they accordingly returned to the neighbourhood in which they had passed the first winter, where they remained throughout the third winter, and in the following spring set sail for Greenland.

In a manuscript written probably between 1370 and 1390, but certainly before the close of the fourteenth century, are two detached narratives which, considered together, form another version of the history of the discovery and exploration of Wineland. In this account the discovery is ascribed to one Biarni Heriulfsson, and the date assigned to this event is fixed several years anterior to that of Leif Ericsson's voyage; indeed, according to this account, Leif's voyage to Wineland is not treated as accidental, but as the direct result of Biarni's description of the land which he had found. This version differs further, from that already described, in recounting three voyages besides that undertaken by Leif, making in all four voyages of exploration—the first headed by Leif, the second by Leif's brother, Thorvald, the third by Karlsefni, and the fourth and last led by Freydis, a natural daughter of Eric the Red. This account of the discovery is treated at length, and certain of its inconsistencies pointed out in another place, and it is, therefore, not necessary to examine it more particularly here. The statement concerning the discovery of Wineland by Biarni Heriulfsson is not confirmed by any existing collateral evidence, while that which would assign the honour to Leif Ericsson is; moreover, beyond the testimony of this, the Flatey Book, version, there is no reason to believe that more than a single voyage of exploration took place, namely, that of Thorfinn Karlsefni. So far as the statements of this second version coincide with that of the first, there seems to be no good reason for calling them in question; where they do not, they may well receive more particular scrutiny than has been directed to them, hitherto, since the Flatey Book narrative is that which has generally been treated as the more important, and its details have, in consequence, received the greater publicity.

Especially has one of the statements, which appears in this second version, claimed the attention of writers, who have sought to determine from it the site of Wineland.

Rafn, by the ingenious application of a subtle theory, succeeded in computing from this statement the exact latitude, to the second, of the southernmost winter-quarters of the explorers, and for nearly fifty years after its publication Rafn's method of interpretation remained essentially unassailed. In 1883, however, Professor Gustav Storm, of Christiania, propounded a novel, but withal a simple and scientific interpretation of this passage<sup>1</sup>, which can hardly fail to appeal to the discernment of any reader who may not in advance have formed his conclusions as to where Wineland ought to have been. Professor Storm's method of interpretation does not seek to determine from the passage the exact spot which the explorers reached (for which, it may be remarked, the passage does not afford sufficiently accurate data), but he is enabled by his process of reasoning to determine a limit, north of which Wineland could not have been, and this limit is approximately 49°. A region not far removed to the southward of this latitude conforms sufficiently well to the descriptions of the country, given in the narratives of the exploration, to serve to confirm Professor Storm's result, and also the relative accuracy of the mooted passage itself. It will be apparent from an examination of this author's treatise that it is not necessarily proven that Wineland may not have been situated to the southward of latitude 49°, but it would seem to be wellnigh certain that thus far south it must have been.

There is no suggestion in Icelandic writings of a permanent occupation of the country, and after the exploration at the beginning of the eleventh century, it is not known that Wineland was ever again visited by Icelanders, although it would appear that a voyage thither was attempted in the year 1121, but with what result is not known. That portion of the discovery known as Markland was revisited however, in 1347, by certain seamen from the Icelandic colony in Greenland.

It will be seen from this summary that the Wineland history is of the briefest, but brief as it is, it has been put in jeopardy no less by those who would prove too much, than by those who would deny all. It may not be unprofitable in the present aspect of the question to appeal to the records themselves.

CHAPTER I.

EARLY FRAGMENTARY REFERENCES TO WINELAND.

WINELAND the Good is first mentioned in Icelandic literature by the Priest Ari Thorgilsson [Þorgilsson], in a passage contained in his so-called Íslendingabók [Icelanders' Book]. Ari, commonly called the Learned [fróði], an agnomen which he received after his death<sup>1</sup>, was born in Iceland in the year 1067<sup>2</sup>, and lived to the ripe age of eighty-one<sup>3</sup>, acquiring a positive claim to the appellation 'hinn gamli' [the Old, the Elder], which is once given him<sup>4</sup>; in this instance, however, to distinguish him from another of the same name<sup>5</sup>. Of Ari, the father of Icelandic historiography, the author of Heimskringla<sup>6</sup>, the most comprehensive of Icelandic histories, says in the prologue to his work:

'The priest Ari Thorgilsson the Learned, Gelli's grandson, was the first of men here in the land [Iceland] to write ancient and modern lore in the Northern tongue; he wrote chiefly in the beginning of his book, concerning Iceland's colonization and legislation, then of the law-speakers (2), how long each was in office<sup>7</sup>, down to the introduction of Christianity into Iceland, and then on to his own day. Therein he also treats of much other old lore, both of the lives of the kings of Norway and Denmark, as well as of those of England, as likewise of the important events, which have befallen here in the land, and all of his narrations seem to me most trustworthy. . . . It is not strange that Ari should have been well-informed in the ancient lore, both here and abroad, since he had both acquired it from old men and wise, and was himself eager to learn and gifted with a good memory<sup>8</sup>.'

By this name the great historical work, 'The Lives of the Kings of Norway,' is generally known. The name is derived from the introductory words of the history, 'Kringla heimsins sú er mannfólkit byggir,' i.e. 'the world's orb, which is inhabited by mankind.'

In the introduction to the Íslendingabók, Ari says:

‘I first composed an Íslendingabók for our Bishops Thorlak [Þorlákr] and Ketil [Ketill], and showed it to them, as well as to Sæmund (Sæmundr) the Priest. And forasmuch as they were pleased [either] to have it thus, or augmented, I accordingly wrote this [the “libellus”<sup>1</sup>], similar in character, with the exception of the genealogy and lives of the kings, and have added that of which I have since acquired closer knowledge, and which is now more accurately set forth in this [the “libellus”] than in that<sup>2</sup>.’

These words conjoined with the quoted statement concerning the character of the historian’s work, and supplemented by references to Ari in other Icelandic writings<sup>3</sup>, have given rise to a controversy as to the probable scope of Ari’s literary activity. Whether the conclusion be reached that Ari was the author of several books, as has been claimed, or that the Íslendingabók, which has perished, to which he refers in the words above quoted, was a much larger and more comprehensive work than the so-called Íslendingabók which has been preserved to us, there seems to be abundant reason for the belief that all of Ari’s historical material was by no means comprised in the only book of his now existing, about whose authorship there can be no room for dispute<sup>4</sup>. Of this book, the so-called Íslendingabók, the oldest manuscripts are two paper copies, of a lost parchment manuscript, belonging to the Arna-Magnæan Collection in the University Library of Copenhagen, which are known as 113 a and 113 b fol. At the end of 113 a, the scribe has written as follows:

‘These “Schedæ” and narratives of the priest Ari the Learned are copied from a vellum in his own hand, as men believe, at Villingaholt, by the priest John Ellindsson [Jón Erlendsson], Anno domini 1651, the next Monday after the third Sunday after Easter.’

This John Erlendsson is known to have made transcripts of many of the sagas

<sup>2</sup> The proper interpretation of the passage, which is by no means as obvious as could be wished, is critically considered by Björn M. Ólsen in an article entitled ‘Om Forholdet mellem de to Bearbejdelser af Are’s Íslendingebog,’ contained in Aarbøger for Nordisk Oldkyndighed og Historie, Copenh. 1885, p. 341 et seq.

<sup>3</sup> As in Landnámabók [Book of Settlement: the Domesday Book of Iceland]: ‘So Ari Thorgilsson says, that twenty-five ships sailed to Greenland that summer,’ &c., ch. 14, pt. 2; and again, ch. 15, pt. 5: ‘Now we have considered briefly the settlement of Iceland, according to that which learned men have written, first, the priest Ari Thorgilsson the Learned,’ &c.

for Bryniolf [Brynjólf] Sveinsson, Bishop of Skálholt<sup>1</sup>. To this worthy bishop's<sup>2</sup> literary ardour, and zeal in collecting the neglected treasures of his language, we owe the preservation of many manuscripts, which would, but for him, doubtless, have perished before the coming of the indefatigable collector, Arni Magnusson.

Bishop Bryniolf, unfortunately, left no heir, interested in the preservation of his library, and his books were soon scattered. When Arni Magnusson visited Iceland, thirty years after the Bishop's death, and ransacked the island for surviving manuscripts, the vellum of the Íslendingabók, doubtless one of the oldest of Icelandic manuscripts, had entirely disappeared<sup>3</sup>. Concerning the two paper copies of this vellum, which he succeeded in obtaining, Arni has inserted the following memorandum in the manuscript described as 113 b. fol.:

'The various different readings noted here throughout in my hand, are taken from another copy [113 a. fol.] written by the Rev. John Erlendsson in 1651. This was formerly the property of the Rev. Torfi Jonsson [Jónsson] of Bær, who inherited it from Bishop Bryniolf Sveinsson; I obtained it, however, from Thorlak, son of Bishop Thord [Þorlákr Þórðarson]; it formed originally a portion of a large book, which I took apart, separating the treatises. This copy I have called "Codex B," signifying either "Baiensis," or the second, from the order of the letters of the alphabet. Concerning 'Codex B,' it is my conjecture that the Rev. John copied it first from the vellum; that Bishop Bryniolf did not like the copy [for this Codex is less exact than Codex A, as may be seen by comparing them]. . . . wherefore the Rev. John made a new copy of the parchment manuscript, taking greater care to follow the original literally, whence it is probable that this Codex A was both the later and the better copy.'

Both of the paper manuscripts 'A' and 'B' were written, it is believed, within the same year, and in each of them the paragraphs containing the reference to Wine-land are almost identical; the Icelandic name in 'A' being spelt Winland, in 'B' Vinland, a clerical variation, devoid of significance. This paragraph, which is the sixth in Ari's history, is as follows:

'That country which is called Greenland, was discovered and colonized from Iceland. Eric the Red [Eirekr enn Rauði] was the name of the man, an inhabitant of Breidafirth

<sup>2</sup> A brief but entertaining account of this remarkable man is contained in the Introduction to the Corpus Poeticum Boreale, Vigfusson and Powell, Oxford, 1883, vol. i. pp. xxii-xxv.

<sup>3</sup> Bishop Brynjólf died in 1675. Arni's visit was made between the years 1702 and 1712. For an account of Arni Magnusson's life and labours, see 'Biographiske Efterretninger om Arne Magnussen'; ved Jon Olafsen fra Grønnavik. Med Indledning, &c., af E. C. Werlauff, contained in, Nordisk Tidsskrift for Oldkyndighed, Copenh. 1836, pp. 1-166.

[Breiðfirser], who went out thither from here, and settled at that place, which has since been called Ericsfirth [Eiríksfjörðr]. He gave a name to the country, and called it Greenland, and said, that it must persuade men to go thither, if the land had a good name. They found there, both east and west in the country, the dwellings of men, and fragments of boats, and stone implements<sup>1</sup>, such that it may be perceived from these, that that manner of people had been there who have inhabited Wineland, and whom the Greenlanders call Skrellings [Scrælinga, nom. Skrælingjar]. And this, when he set about the colonization of the country, was XIV or XV winters<sup>2</sup> before the introduction of Christianity here in Iceland<sup>3</sup>, according to that which a certain man [lit. he], who himself accompanied Eric the Red thither, informed Thorkel [Þorkell] Gellisson.'

This mention of Wineland, which in itself may appear to be of little importance, acquires its greatest value from that which it leaves unsaid; for had Ari not known that his reference to Wineland and its inhabitants would be entirely intelligible to his readers, he would hardly have employed it, as he does, to inform his Greenland chronicle. This passing notice, therefore, indicates a general diffusion of the knowledge of the Wineland discoveries among Ari's contemporaries at the time when the paragraph was composed. The 'libellus' [Íslendingabók] was probably written about the year 1134<sup>4</sup>, and we are accordingly apprised that at that time the facts concerning the Wineland discovery, upon an acquaintance with which Ari seems to rely, were notorious. It is impossible, however, to determine whether Ari presumed upon a knowledge derived from particulars, which he had himself previously published, or upon a prevalent acquaintance with the accounts of the explorers themselves. It is, at least, questionable whether Ari would have been content to presuppose such local historical knowledge if he had not already sealed it with his own authority elsewhere. Nor is the importance which he may have assigned to the Wineland discovery material to this view. He had set about writing a chronicle of his fatherland, and his passing allusion to Wineland, without a word of explanation, appears incompatible with the duty which he had assumed, unless, indeed, he had already dealt with the subject of the Wineland discovery in a previous work. Be this as it may, however, certain it is, that Wineland has found further mention in two Icelandic works, which in their primitive form have been very generally accredited to Ari, namely the Landnámabók [Book of Settlement] and the Kristni-Saga [the Narrative of the Introduction of

<sup>2</sup> The customary expression for years, corresponding with our use of the word, 'summers,' as in the expression, he was a lad of twelve summers

<sup>3</sup> Christianity became the legalized religion of Iceland in the year 1000; the settlement of Greenland, therefore, according to Ari's chronology, must have taken place in 985 or 986.

Christianity into Iceland]<sup>1</sup>. The first of these, in a passage already cited<sup>2</sup>, expressly acknowledges Ari's share in the authorship<sup>3</sup>. One manuscript of this work, from which the passage is taken, [No. 371, 4to, in the Arna-Magnæan Collection], while it is the oldest extant manuscript containing the Landnámabók [now in an incomplete state] presents this in a later recension of the original work, than that which is contained in the much more modern manuscript, AM. 107, fol. This latter manuscript, like the copy of Íslendingabók, was written by the Rev. John Erlendsson for Bishop Bryniolf Sveinsson<sup>4</sup>. Both of the references to Wineland in the Landnámabók occur incidentally in the course of the history, and are of the briefest. The first of these treats of the adventure of Ari Marsson [Mársson]; it is to be found in Chapter 22, of the second part of the book, and is as follows:

'... their<sup>5</sup> son was Ari. He was driven out of his course at sea to White-men's-land [Hvítamanna-land], which is called by some persons Ireland the Great [Írland it mikla] (58); it lies westward in the sea near Wineland the Good [Vínland it góða]; it is said to be six "doegra"<sup>6</sup> sail west of Ireland; Ari could not depart thence, and was baptized there. The first account of this was given by Rafn who sailed to Limerick (3) [Hlimreksfari], and who remained for a long time at Limerick in Ireland. So Thorkel [Þorkell] Geitisson<sup>7</sup> states that Icelanders report, who have heard Thorfinn, Earl of the Orkneys (4) [Þorfinnr jarl í Orkneyjum] say, that Ari had been recognized there, and was not permitted to leave [lit. could not leave], but was treated with great respect there.'

The names of Ari Marsson's wife, and of his three sons are given in the same passage from which the quotation is made, and additional concurrent evidence is not wanting to serve to establish the existence of this man; any particulars, however, which might serve to enlighten this narrative, or aid in determining whence Rafn and Earl Thorfinn derived their intelligence, are lacking. Without free conjectural emendation to aid in its interpretation, this description of Ari Marsson's visit to Ireland the Great is of the same doubtful historical value as a later account of another visit to an unknown land, to be considered hereafter.

The second reference to Wineland in the Landnámabók is contained in a list of the descendants of Snorri Head-Thord's son [Snorri Hǫfða-Þórðarson]:

'Their<sup>1</sup> son was Thord Horse-head [Þórðr Hest-höfði], father of Karlsefni, who found Wineland the Good, Snorri's father,' &c.<sup>2</sup>

A genealogy which entirely coincides with that of the histories of the discovery of Wineland, as well as with that of the episcopal genealogy appended to the Íslendingabók<sup>3</sup>. The Landnámabók contains no other mention of Wineland, but a more extended notice is contained in the work already named, which, in its present form, is supposed to retain evidence of the learned Ari's pen.

The Kristni-Saga, which is supplementary, historically, to the Landnámabók, is given in its entirety in AM. 105, fol. This is a paper copy of an earlier manuscript made by the same industrious cleric, John Erlendsson, for Bishop Bryniolf. A portion of the same history has also been preserved along with the detached leaves of the Landnámabók now deposited in the Arna-Magnæan Collection, No. 371, 4to. These fragments of the two histories originally belonged to one work, the so-called Hauk's Book [Hauksbók], a vellum manuscript of the fourteenth century, hereafter to be more fully described. The history of the Wineland discovery is contained in the eleventh chapter of the printed edition of the Kristni-Saga, in the following words:

'That summer (5) King Olaf [Tryggvason] went from the country southward to Vindland [the land of the Wends]; then, moreover, he sent Leif Ericsson [Leifr Eiríksson] to Greenland, to proclaim the faith there. On this voyage [lit. then] Leif found Wineland the Good; he also found men on a wreck at sea, wherefore he was called Leif the Lucky [Leifr hinn heppni]'.<sup>4</sup>

Of the same tenor as this brief paragraph of the Kristni-Saga, is a chapter in the Codex Frisianus [Fríssbók], number 45, fol., of the Arna-Magnæan manuscripts. This Codex Frisianus, or, as it has been more appropriately called, the Book of Kings [Konungabók], is a beautifully written and well-preserved parchment manuscript of 124 leaves; it obtains its name from a former owner, Otto Friis of Salling; it subsequently became the property of one Jens Rosenkranz, and next passed into the possession of Arni Magnusson<sup>1</sup>. Friis' Book was, in all probability, written about the beginning of the fourteenth century<sup>2</sup>; and if the conjectures as to its age are correct, it is, perhaps, the oldest extant Icelandic manuscript containing an account of the Wineland discovery. It is believed, from internal evidence, that the greater part of the Codex was written by an Icelander, in Norway, possibly for a Norwegian, and that the manuscript was never in Iceland<sup>3</sup>. The early history of the Codex is not known. Certain marginal notes appear to have been inserted in the manuscript about the year 1550 by Lawman Laurents Hanssön, and it is conjectured that the book was then owned in Bergen<sup>4</sup>; fifty years later we find it in Denmark; for about the year 1600 a Dane, by the name of Slangerup [Slangendorpius], inserted his name upon a fly-leaf in the book, which leaf, Arni Magnusson tells us, was removed when he had the manuscript bound<sup>5</sup>. In this 'Book of Kings,' the Saga of Olaf Tryggvason, in which the history of the discovery of Wineland occurs, follows closely the same saga as it was written in the two lost parchment manuscripts of the 'Heimskringla,' as we are enabled to determine from the copies of these lost vellums made by the Icelander, Asgeir Jonsson [Ásgeirr Jónsson]<sup>6</sup>. It is not known whether the author of the 'Heimskringla' had access to the history of the Wineland discovery in some such extended form as that contained in Hauk's Book; indeed it has been suggested, that he may only have been acquainted with the brief narrative of the Kristni-Saga<sup>7</sup>, but certain it is, that his account of the discovery was not influenced by the version presented in the Flatey Book, which narrative appears in the first printed edition of the 'Heimskringla,' where it was interpolated by the editor, Johann Peringskiöld<sup>8</sup>.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Unger, Codex Frisianus, Christiania, 1871: Forord, p. iii [i.e. p. 1]. Dr. Gustav Storm gives the date as about the year 1300; cf. his Sigurd Ranessön's Proces, Christiania, 1877, p. 44; Vigfusson would make the manuscript still older, namely 'c. 1260-80.' Cf. Corpus Poeticum Boreale, Oxford, 1883, vol. i. p. xlix. If this last view is sound, then the MS. is decidedly older than Hauk's Book, the earliest manuscript mentioning Wineland, of whose date we have certain knowledge.

<sup>6</sup> The two parchment manuscripts belonging to the Library of the University of Copenhagen, called Kringla [i.e. Heimskringla], and Jöfraskinna (King's vellum), were destroyed by the fire of 1728. The copies, which had, fortunately, been made, have been preserved. Cf. Unger, Heimskringla, Christiania, 1868, Forord, p. iii (i.e. p. 1).

Similarly, any trace of the Flatey Book version of the discovery is lacking from Friis' Book, although the author of the saga of Olaf Tryggvason, therein contained, appears to have been acquainted with a somewhat more detailed account of Leif Ericsson's life than that afforded by the Kristni-Saga, if we may judge from his own language, as we find it in column 136, page 34*b*, of the manuscript:

'WINELAND THE GOOD FOUND.

'Leif, a son of Eric the Red, passed this same winter, in good repute, with King Olaf, and accepted Christianity. And that summer<sup>1</sup>, when Gizur went to Iceland, King Olaf sent Leif to Greenland to proclaim Christianity there. He sailed that summer to Greenland. He found men upon a wreck at sea and succoured them. Then, likewise, he discovered Wineland the Good, and arrived in Greenland in the autumn. He took with him thither a priest and other spiritual teachers, and went to Brattahlid to make his home with his father, Eric. People afterwards called him Leif the Lucky. But his father, Eric, said that one account should balance the other, that Leif had rescued the ship's crew, and this that he had brought the trickster to Greenland. This<sup>2</sup> was the priest<sup>3</sup>.'

Almost identical with the history of the discovery contained in Friis' Book is that of the so-called longer saga of Olaf Tryggvason. This saga, in its printed form, has been compiled from several manuscripts of the Arna-Magnæan collection, the most important of which is No. 61, fol., a codex dating from about the year 1400<sup>4</sup>. This account is contained in the 231st chapter of the printed version<sup>5</sup> as follows:

'King Olaf then<sup>6</sup> sent Leif to Greenland to proclaim Christianity there. The king sent a priest and other holy men with him, to baptize the people there, and to instruct them

In composition, doubtless, much more recent than the notices already cited, is a passage in the collectanea of Middle-age wisdom known as No. 194, 8vo, of the Arna-Magnæan Library. This manuscript contains fifty-two pages, part of which are in Icelandic and part in Latin, written between the years 1400-1450<sup>3</sup>. From a slip in Arni Magnusson's hand, inserted in the collection, it appears that Arni obtained it from the Rev. Thorvald Stephenson [Þorvaldr Stefánsson] in the year 1707. Whatever its condition may have been at that time, the parchment upon which it is written is now in a sad state of decay. In this respect page 10 of the vellum, upon the back of which the Wineland chorography is written, in Icelandic, is no exception; fortunately, however, the lacunæ are so inconsiderable in this page, that they may be readily supplied from that which survives, and the Wineland passage appears as follows:

'Southward from Greenland is Helluland, then comes [lit. is] Markland; thence it is not far to Wineland the Good, which some men believe extends from Africa, and, if this be so, then there is an open sea flowing in between Wineland and Markland. It is said, that Thorfinn<sup>4</sup> Karlsefni hewed a "house-neat-timber" (6) and then went to seek Wineland the Good, and came to where they believed this land to be, but they did not succeed in exploring it, or in obtaining any of its products (7). Leif the Lucky first found Wineland, and he then found

Hann tók í hafi skipshöfn þeira manna, er þá væri vfarir, ok lágu á skips-flaki albrotnu, ok í þeiri sömvi ferð fann hann Vindland (sic) hit góða ok kom at á-liðnu því svmri til Grænlandz, ok fór til vistar í Brattahlíð til Eiríks föður síns. Kolludu menn hann sípan Leif hinn heppna. En Eiríkr faðir hans sagði at þat var samskullda, er Leifr hafði borgit ok gefit líf skips-höfn manna ok þat er hann hafði flutt skemanninginn til Grænlandz, svá kallaði hann prestin. <sup>3</sup> The date is given upon the authority of Dr. Kálund, the Librarian of the Arna-Magnæan Library.

merchants in evil plight at sea, and restored them to life by God's mercy; and he introduced Christianity into Greenland, which waxed there so, that an episcopal seat was established there, at the place called Gardar. England and Scotland are one island, although each of them is a kingdom. Ireland is a great island. Iceland is also a great island [to the north of] Ireland. These countries are all in that part of the world which is called Europe<sup>1</sup>.

In a fascicle of detached vellum fragments, brought together in AM. No. 736, 4to, there are two leaves containing, besides certain astronomical material, a concise geographical compilation. In this Wineland is assigned a location identical with that in the codex from which the quotation has just been made, and the notice of Wineland is limited to this brief statement:

'From Greenland to the southward lies Helluland, then Markland; thence it is not far to Wineland, which some men believe extends from Africa. England and Scotland are one island,' &c.<sup>2</sup>

While the reference to Wineland omits the account of Thorfinn's visit and Leif's discovery, the language in which the location of the land is given, as well as the language of the context, has so great a likeness to that of 194, 8vo, that, although it was perhaps written a few years earlier, there seems to be a strong probability that each of the scribes of these manuscripts derived his material from a common source.

Somewhat similar in character to the above notices is the brief reference written in the vellum fragment contained in AM. 764, 4to. This fragment comprises a so-called 'totius orbis brevis descriptio,' written probably about the year 1400<sup>3</sup>. Upon the second page of this 'brief description' is the passage:

The words or portions of words which are enclosed between brackets are either wholly or partially wanting, by reason of defects in the vellum; they have been supplied either from the traces, which are still decipherable, or from the context. It will be noticed that no considerable break occurs in that part of the paragraph which deals particularly with Wineland.

'From Biarmaland uninhabited regions extend from the north, until Greenland joins them. South from Greenland lies Helluland, then Markland. Thence it is not far to Wineland. Iceland is a great island,' &c.<sup>1</sup>

Differing in nature from these geographical notices [but of even greater interest and historical value by reason of the corroborative evidence which it affords of certain particulars set forth in the leading narrative of the Wineland discovery] is the mention of Wineland contained in a chapter of the Eyrbyggja Saga [Saga of the People of Eyrr]. No complete vellum manuscript of this saga has been preserved. The eldest manuscript remnant of the saga is deposited in AM. 162 E, fol., and consists of two leaves written about 1300<sup>2</sup>; these leaves do not, however, contain that portion of the saga with which we are concerned. Of another vellum codex containing this saga, which has entirely perished, we have certain knowledge. This was the so-called Vatnshyrna or Vatnshorn's Book [Vatshornsbók], a manuscript which at one time belonged to the eminent Danish scholar, Peder Hans Resen, from whom it received the name by which it is sometimes cited, Codex Resenianus. It was bequeathed by Resen to the University Library of Copenhagen, where it was deposited after his death in 1688<sup>3</sup>. It perished in the great fire of October, 1728<sup>4</sup>, but fortunately paper copies, which had been made from it, survived the conflagration. The Vatnshorn Codex, it has been conjectured, was prepared for the same John Haconsen, to whom we are indebted for the great Flatey Book, and was, apparently, written about the year 1400, or, possibly, toward the close of the fourteenth century<sup>5</sup>. The most complete vellum manuscript of the Eyrbyggja Saga now extant, forms a part of the so-called Codex Wolphenbuttelensis, belonging to the Ducal Library of Wolfenbüttel, for which it was purchased in the seventeenth century, at a public sale in Holstein. This manuscript was probably written about the middle of the fourteenth century<sup>6</sup>, and although the first third of the Eyrbyggja Saga has been lost from the codex, that portion of the history which contains the chapter referring to Wineland has been preserved, and is as follows:

<sup>4</sup> It was among the most valuable of the manuscripts which were lost in this fire, the same which destroyed many of Arni Magnússon's treasured books, and, no doubt, hastened the end of that ardent bibliophile, for he survived the loss little more than a year, dying on the 6th of January, 1730.

'After the reconciliation between Steinthor and the people of Alpta-firth, Thorbrand's sons, Snorri and Thorleif Kimbi, went to Greenland. From him<sup>1</sup> Kimbafirth [Kimbafjörðr], (in Greenland), gets its name. Thorleif Kimbi lived in Greenland to old age. But Snorri went to Wineland the Good with Karlsefni; and when they were fighting with the Skrellings there in Wineland, Thorbrand Snorrason<sup>2</sup>, a most valiant man, was killed<sup>3</sup>.'

The foregoing brief notices of Wineland, scattered through so many Icelandic writings, yield no very great amount of information concerning that country. They do afford, however, a clear insight into the wide diffusion of the intelligence of the discovery in the earlier saga period, and in every instance confirm the Wineland history as unfolded in the leading narrative of the discovery, now to be considered.

CHAPTER II.

THE SAGA OF ERIC THE RED.

THE clearest and most complete narrative of the discovery of Wineland, preserved in the ancient Icelandic literature, is that presented in the Saga of Eric the Red. Of this narrative two complete vellum texts have survived. The eldest of these texts is contained in the Arna-Magnæan Codex, No. 544, 4to, which is commonly known as Hauk's Book [Hauksbók]. This manuscript has derived its name from its first owner, for whom the work was doubtless written, and who himself participated in the labour of its preparation. This man, to whom the manuscript traces its origin, has, happily, left, not only in the manuscript itself, but in the history of his time, a record which enables us to determine, with exceptional accuracy, many dates in his life, and from these it is possible to assign approximate dates to that portion of the vellum which contains the narrative of the discovery. This fact possesses the greater interest since of no one of those who participated in the conservation of the elder sagas, have we data so precise as those which have been preserved to us of Hauk Erlendsson [Haukr Erlendsson], to whose care, actual and potential, this manuscript owes its existence.

We know that Jorunn, the mother of this man, was the direct descendant of a famous Icelander<sup>1</sup>. His paternal ancestry is not so clearly established. It has been conjectured that his father, Erlend Olafsson, surnamed the Stout [Erlendr sterki Ólafsson], was the son of a man of humble parentage, and by birth a Norwegian<sup>2</sup>. This view has been discredited, however, and the fact pretty clearly established that Erlend's father, Olaf, was no other than a certain Icelander called Olaf Tot [Óláfr tottr]<sup>3</sup>. Hauk's father, Erlend, was probably the 'Ellindr bóndi' of a letter addressed by certain Icelanders to the Norwegian king, Magnus Law-Amender, in the year 1275<sup>4</sup>. In the year 1283 we find indubitable mention of him in

Icelandic annals as 'legifer,' he having in that year 'come out' to Iceland from Norway vested with the dignity of 'lawman'.<sup>1</sup> It is as the incumbent of a similar office, to which he appears to have been appointed in 1294, that we first find Hauk Erlendsson mentioned<sup>2</sup>. It is not unlikely that Hauk had visited Norway prior to 1301; there can be no doubt that he was in that country in the latter part of that year, for he was a 'lawman' in Osló [the modern Christiania] upon the 28th of January, 1302, since upon that date he published an autographic letter, which is still in existence<sup>3</sup>. Whether the rank of knighthood, which carried with it the title of 'herra',<sup>4</sup> had already been conferred upon him at this time is not certain. He is first mentioned with this title, in Icelandic annals, in 1306, elsewhere in 1305<sup>5</sup>, although it has been claimed that he had probably then enjoyed this distinction for some years<sup>6</sup>, but upon what authority is not clear. While Hauk revisited Iceland upon more than one occasion after the year 1302, much of the remainder of his life appears to have been spent in Norway, where he died in the year 1334<sup>7</sup>.

On the back of page 21 of Hauk's Book Arni Magnusson has written, probably with a view to preserve a fading entry upon the same page, the words: 'This book belongs to Teit Paulsson [Teitr Pálsson], if he be not robbed<sup>8</sup>.' It is not known who this Teit Paulsson was, but it is recorded that a man of this name sailed from Iceland to Norway in the year 1344<sup>9</sup>. He may have been the one-time owner of the book, and, if the manuscript was then in Norway, may have carried it back to Iceland with him. Apart from this conjecture, the fact remains that the early history of Hauk's Book is shrouded in obscurity. It is first mentioned in the beginning of the seventeenth century by John the Learned [Jón lærði]<sup>1</sup>, possibly about 1600<sup>2</sup>, and a few years later by Arngrim Jonsson [Arngrímur Jónsson]<sup>3</sup>; it was subsequently loaned to Bishop Bryniolf Sveinsson, who caused the transcripts of the Landnámabók and the Kristni Saga to be made from it, as has already been related. This part of the codex the Bishop may have returned to the owner, himself retaining the remainder, for, with the exception of the two sagas named, Arni Magnusson obtained the codex from Gaulverjabær in the south of Iceland, and subsequently the remaining leaves of the missing sagas from the Rev. Olaf Jonsson [Síra Óláfr Jónsson], who was the clergyman at Stad in Grunnavík [Staðr í Grunnavík], in north-western Iceland, between the years 1703 and 1707<sup>4</sup>.

Hauk's Book originally contained about 200 leaves<sup>5</sup>, with widely varied contents. Certain leaves of the original manuscript have been detached from the main body of the book, and are now to be found in the Arna-Magnæan Collection, under Nos. 371 and 675, 4to; a portion has been lost, but 107 leaves of the original codex are preserved in AM. 544, 4to. With the exception of those portions just referred to, that part of the manuscript which treats of the Wineland discovery is to be found in this last mentioned volume, from leaves 93 to 101 [back] inclusive. The saga therein contained has no title contemporary with the text, but Arni Magnusson has inserted, in the space left vacant for the title, the words: 'Here begins the Saga of Thorfinn Karlsefni and Snorri Thorbrandsson' ['Hér hefr upp sögu þeirra Þorfinnz

<sup>4</sup> Arni Magnusson's own words are: 'These leaves of Landnáma book, as well as those of Christendom's saga, I have obtained, for the most part, from Sr. Olaf Jonsson, but Sr. Olaf's father [Sr. John Torfason of Stad in Súgandis-firth] obtained these leaves from a neighbouring farmer there in the west, and took them all apart, separating each sheet from the other to use them for binding. . . . But the volume itself . . . I obtained [if I remember aright] from Gaulverjabær in Flói, whither, without doubt, it drifted after the death of Mag. Bryniolf. . . . It is most probable that the book came first from the West firths, and that its owner, from whom Mag. Bryniolf borrowed it, carried back Landnáma to the West, while the rest remained in the South, unless Landnáma had already been separated from the volume, when it came into Mag. Bryniolf's hands, and he accordingly had the book in two parts.' Arni's notes, in the same codex from which the above is quoted, would indicate, that the greater part of the manuscript had come into his possession before 1702; a few leaves he obtained subsequently, and how greatly he prized this manuscript is indicated by his own words in a letter, which he wrote in the hope that it might still be possible to obtain the missing leaves of Landnáma; in this letter he calls the fragment, which he had already secured, 'inter pretiosissima eorum quae mihi sunt.' Karlsefnis oc Snorra Þorbrandzsonar’], although it is not apparent whether he himself invented this title, or derived it from some now unknown source.

The Saga of Thorfinn Karlsefni was written by three different persons; the first portion is in a hand commonly ascribed to Hauk’s so-called ‘first Icelandic secretary.’ On p. 99, l. 14, the ink and the hand change, and beginning with the words Eiríkr svarar vel, the chirography is Hauk’s own, as is readily apparent from a comparison with the autographic letter of 1302, already referred to<sup>1</sup>. Hauk’s own work continues throughout this and the following page, ceasing at the end of the second line on p. 100, with the words kolluðu í Höpi, where he gives place to a new scribe, his so-called ‘second Icelandic secretary.’ Hauk, however, again resumes the pen on the back of p. 101, and himself concludes the saga. Two of the leaves upon which the saga is written are of an irregular shape, and there are holes in two other leaves; these defects were, however, present in the vellum from the beginning, so that they in no wise affect the integrity of the text; on the other hand the lower right-hand corner of p. 99 has become badly blackened, and is, in consequence, partially illegible, as is also the left-hand corner of p. 101; similarly pp. 100 and 101 [back] are somewhat indistinct, but, in the original, still not undecipherable. Initial letters are inserted in red and blue, and the sub-titles in red ink, which has sadly faded. There are three paginations, of which the latest, in red, is the one here adopted.

The genealogy appended to the saga has been brought down to Hauk’s own time, and Hauk therein traces his ancestry to Karlsefni’s Wineland-born son. By means of this genealogical list we are enabled to determine, approximately, the date of this transcript of the original saga, for we read in this list of Hallbera, ‘Abbess of Reyniness,’ and since we know that Hallbera was not consecrated abbess until the year 1299<sup>2</sup>, it becomes at once apparent that the saga could not have been completed before that year. This conclusion is corroborated by additional evidence furnished by this ancestral list, for in this list Hauk has given himself his title ‘herra.’ As has been stated, Hauk is first accorded this title in 1305, he is last mentioned without the title in 1304; which fact not only confirms the conclusion already reached, but enables us to advance the date, prior to which the transcript of the saga could not have been concluded, to 1304. It is not so easy to determine positively when the saga was finished. As Hauk’s own hand brings the saga to a conclusion, it is evident that it must have been completed before, or not later than, the year 1334, the year of his death. If we accept the words of the genealogical list literally, it would appear that Hauk wrote this list not many years before his death, for it is there stated that Fru Ingigerd's daughter 'was' Fru Hallbera, the Abbess. But Hallbera lived until 1330<sup>1</sup>, and the strict construction of Hauk's language might point to the conclusion that the reference to Hallbera was made after her death, and therefore after 1330. Hauk was in Iceland in the years 1330 and 1331<sup>2</sup>, doubtless for the last time. One of the scribes who aided him in writing the codex was probably an Icclander, as may be gleaned from his orthography, and as it is highly probable that the contents of the codex were for the most part copied from originals owned in Iceland, it may be that the transcript of this saga, as well as the book itself, was completed during this last visit. It has been claimed that a portion of Hauk's book, preceding the Saga of Thorfinn, was written prior to Hauk's acquirement of his title, a view founded upon the fact that his name is there cited without the addition of his title, and this view is supported by the corresponding usage of the Annals<sup>3</sup>. If this be true, then, upon the above hypothesis, a period of more than twenty-five years must have elapsed between the inception of the work and the completion of the 'Thorfinn's Saga.' Doubtless a considerable time was consumed in the compilation and transcription of the contents of this manuscript; but it seems scarcely probable that so long a time should have intervened between the preparation of the different portions of the work. Wherefore, if the reference to the Abbess Hallbera be accepted literally, the conjecture that the earlier portion of the codex was written prior to 1299 would appear to be doubtful, and it may be necessary either to advance the date of this portion of the manuscript or place the date of the Saga of Thorfinn anterior to that suggested. However this may be, two facts seem to be clearly established, first, that this saga was not written before 1299, and second, that this eldest surviving detailed narrative of the discovery of Wineland was written not later than the year 1334.

In the vellum codex, known as Number 557, 4to, of the Arna-Magnæan Collection, is an account of the Wineland discovery, so strikingly similar to that of Hauk's Book, that there can be no doubt that both histories were derived from the same source. The history of the discovery contained in the above codex is called the 'Saga of Eric the Red' [Saga Eireks rauða]. This may well have been the primitive title of the saga of Hauk's Book, which, as has been noted, obtains its modern name, 'Thorfinns Saga Karlsefnis,' from the entry made by Arni Magnusson, early in the eighteenth century. That both sagas were copied from the same vellum is by no means certain; if both transcripts be judged strictly by their contents it becomes at once apparent that this could not have been the fact, and such a conjecture is only tenable upon the theory that the scribes of Hauk's Book edited the saga which they copied. This, while it is very doubtful in the case of the body of the text of the Hauk's Book Saga of Thorfinn, may not even be conjectured of the Saga of Eric the Red. The latter saga was undoubtedly a literal copy from the original, for there are certain minor confusions of the text, which indicate, unmistakably, either the heedlessness of the copyist, or that the scribe was working from a somewhat illegible original whose defects he was not at pains to supply. If both sagas were copied from different early vellums, the simpler language of the Saga of Eric the Red would seem to indicate that it was a transcript of a somewhat earlier form of the saga than that from which the saga of Hauk's Book was derived. This, however, is entirely conjectural, for the codex containing the Saga of Eric the Red was not written for many years after Hauk's Book, and probably not until the following century. So much the orthography and hand of 557, 4to, indicate, and, from the application of this test, the codex has been determined to date from the fifteenth century<sup>1</sup>, and has been ascribed by very eminent authority to ca. 1400<sup>2</sup>.

The Saga of Eric the Red begins with the thirteenth line of page 27 of the codex [the title appears at the top of this page], and concludes in the fifth line on the back of page 35, the hand being the same throughout. Spaces were left for initial letters, but these were not inserted, except in one case by a different and indifferent penman. With the exception of a very few words, or portions of words, upon page 30 [back] and page 31, the manuscript of the saga is clearly legible throughout. Certain slight defects in the vellum have existed from the beginning, and there is, therefore, no material hiatus in the entire text, for the sense of the few indistinct words is either clearly apparent from the context, or may be supplied from the sister text of Hauk's Book.

In his catalogue of parchment manuscripts<sup>3</sup>, Arni Magnusson states, that he obtained this manuscript from Bishop John Vidalin [Mag. Jón Vidalin]<sup>4</sup> and adds the conjecture, that it had either belonged to the Skálholt Church, or came thither from among Bishop Bryniolf's books. This conjecture, that the book belonged to the Church of Skálholt, has, however, been disputed, and the place of its compilation, at the same time, assigned to the north of Iceland<sup>1</sup>.

These sagas in Hauk's Book and AM. 557, 4to, are so closely allied, belong so naturally together and each so enlightens the other, that the two texts have been collated, and the translation, which follows, is prepared from both. In the body of the text of the translation, the saga as contained in Hauk's Book has been in the main more closely followed, but the language of the saga of AM. 557, 4to, is occasionally substituted or added, where such treatment has seemed to serve in any degree to inform the narrative. In all cases, however, where any considerable differences exist between the two texts, these differences are recorded in the notes, the abbreviations 'EsR', and 'FsK' indicating the language of the Saga of Eric the Red [Eiríks saga Rauða] and that of the Saga of Thorfinn Karlsefni [Þorfinns saga Karlsefnis] respectively.

The Saga of Eric the Red [and both texts are included under this title] presents a clear and graphic account of the discovery and exploration of Wineland the Good. In this narrative the discovery is ascribed to Leif, the son of Eric the Red, who hit upon the land, by chance, during a voyage from Norway to Greenland. This voyage, as has already been stated, probably took place in the year 1000.

After his return to Greenland, Leif's account of the land which he had discovered, seems to have persuaded his brother, Thorstein, and possibly his father, to undertake an expedition to the strange country. This voyage, which was not destined to meet with a successful issue, may well have fallen in the year following Leif's return, and therefore, it may be conjectured, in the year 1001. About this time there had arrived in Greenland an Icelander of considerable prominence, an old friend of Eric's, named Thorbiorn Vifilsson, who had brought with him his daughter, Gudrid, or, as she is also called, Thurid. He must have arrived before Thorstein Ericsson's voyage, for we are told, that it was in Thorbiorn's ship that this voyage was undertaken. It seems probable that Thorbiorn arrived at Brattahlid [Eric's home] during Leif's absence from Greenland, and if this be true, it follows, that Thorbiorn and Gudrid must have been converted to Christianity before its acceptance in Iceland as the legalized religion of the land; for very soon after their arrival in Greenland, Gudrid alludes to the fact of her being a Christian, and, from the language of the saga, there can be no question that her father had likewise embraced the new faith. The presence of these companions in the faith may have materially aided Leif in the work of proselytism, in which he engaged, upon his return to Greenland. We are told, that Thorbiorn did not arrive at Brattahlid until the second year after his departure from Iceland, wherefore, if the assumption that he arrived during Leif's absence be sound, it becomes apparent that he must have left Iceland in the summer of the year 998 or 999.

Eric's son, Thorstein, wooed and married Gudrid, and the wedding was celebrated at Brattahlid in the autumn. It is recorded in the saga that Gudrid was regarded as a most desirable match. Thorstein may have promptly recognized her worth, and his marriage may have occurred in the autumn of the same year in which he returned from his unlucky voyage. It could not well have been celebrated in the previous year, for Thorstein's allusions on his death-bed to the religion of Greenland, indicate that Christianity must have been for a longer time the accepted faith of the land than it could have been at the close of the year 1000.

In the winter after his marriage, Thorstein died, and in the spring, Gudrid returned to Brattahlid. Thorfinn Karlsefni arrived at Brattahlid about this time, possibly the next autumn after Thorstein's death, and in his company came Snorri Thorbrandsson. Karlsefni was married to Gudrid shortly after the Yule-tide following his arrival. If he arrived in Greenland in the autumn of the year 1002, this wedding may, accordingly, have taken place about the beginning of the year 1003<sup>1</sup>. In the summer following his marriage, Thorfinn appears to have undertaken his voyage of exploration to Wineland, that is to say in the summer of the year 1003. A longer time may well have elapsed after Gudrid's arrival before her marriage with Thorstein, and similarly it is even more probable that a longer interval elapsed between Thorstein's death and Gudrid's second marriage. The purpose of this conjectural chronology is to determine, if possible, a date prior to which Thorfinn Karlsefni's voyage to Wineland could not have been undertaken. While, therefore, it is altogether probable that this voyage was made after the year 1003, it does not appear to be possible, for the reasons presented, that it could have taken place before that year.

<sup>1</sup> Vigfusson, in his essay, 'Um tímatal í Íslandfnga sögum í fornöld,' in Safn til sögu Íslands, loc. cit. vol. i. p. 339, and also in his edition of the Eyrbyggja Saga, loc. cit. p. 129, assigns as the date of Snorri's departure to Greenland, and, by the same token, Karlsefni's, the year 998 [or 999]. This conclusion he reaches from the passage in Eyrbyggja, already cited p. 18, wherein it is stated that 'after the reconciliation of the people of Eyrr and the people of Alpta-firth, Thorbrand's sons, Snorri and Thorleif, went to Greenland.' In Vigfusson's edition of the Eyrbyggja Saga, the chapter containing this statement is numbered 48, and the next succeeding chapter begins: 'Next to this, Gizur the White and Hialti, his son-in-law, came out to proclaim the gospel, and all the people of Iceland were baptized, and Christianity was legally accepted by the Althing.' The words 'next to this' in the position which they thus occupy seem to refer to the words of the preceding chapter: 'After the reconciliation of the people of Eyrr and the people of Alpta-firth,' that is, 'next after this' reconciliation Gizur and his son-in-law came to Iceland. But Gizur and Hialti came to Iceland on this mission in 999, and the obvious inference is that the reconciliation was accomplished prior to this, according to Vigfusson in the previous year, 998. [Cf. Eyrbyggja Saga, ed. Vigfusson, p. 129.] In the eldest vellum fragment of the Eyrbyggja Saga which we now possess, AM. 162 E. fol., chapter 48 of the Vigfusson text does not occupy the place preceding the account of the arrival of Gizur on his mission. The limited contents of this fragment do not, unfortunately, enable us to determine where the chapter did stand in this text, but presumably it occupied the same position as that in which it occurs in the Codex Wolphenbuttelensis, as well as in the vellum fragment of the saga contained in AM. 445 b, 4to, namely, after chapter 55 of the Vigfusson edition. [Cf., in that edition, note 11, p. 91.] To the events described in this chapter 55, Vigfusson [Eyrbyggja, p. 129] assigns the date 1001. The chapter immediately following this chapter 55 begins with the words: 'Snorri Godi dwelt at Helgafell eight years after Christianity became the legal religion

Problems suggested by the text of another version of the history of the discovery and exploration, namely, that contained in the Flatey Book, are considered elsewhere, as are also points of difference between that narrative and the history as set forth in the Saga of Eric the Red. It remains to be said, that the text of this saga does not present such difficulties as those which are suggested by a critical examination of the narrative of the Flatey Book. This version of the history of the discovery does contain, however, one statement, which is not altogether intelligible and which is not susceptible of very satisfactory explanation, namely, that 'there came no snow' in the land which the Wineland explorers had found. This assertion does not consist with our present knowledge of the winter climate of the eastern coast of that portion of North America situated within the latitude which was probably reached by the explorers. The observation may, perhaps, be best explained upon the theory that the original verbal statement of the explorers was, that there was no snow in Wineland, such as that to which they were accustomed in the countries with which they were more familiar<sup>1</sup>. With this single exception there appears to be no statement in the Saga of Eric the

of Iceland.' The fact, therefore, that the record of the voyage of Thorbrand's sons to Greenland does, in certain other late manuscripts, occupy the place which Vigfusson assigns it, would not seem to afford sufficient reason for establishing the date of this voyage, by the words of a subsequent passage, when, as has been stated, this passage does not indeed follow, but precedes the chapter in the oldest manuscripts now existing. If Snorri [and Karlsefni] sailed to Greenland immediately after the reconciliation, as Vigfusson conjectures, a fatal flaw in the chronology at once appears. By a comparison with the language of the Saga of Eric the Red, it will be seen that if Karlsefni and Snorri sailed to Greenland in 998 or 999, Karlsefni's voyage of exploration, which was undertaken in the year after his arrival in Greenland, would fall either in the year prior to that assigned to Leif's discovery of Wineland, or in the year of that discovery, both of which hypotheses are, of course, impossible. The simpler explanation, and one entirely consistent with the language of the Eyrbyggja Saga, would seem to be that the word 'after' in the sentence, 'Thorbrand's sons went to Greenland after the reconciliation,' does not mean the same year or the next year after the reconciliation, but some time thereafter, and necessarily later than the year 1001, the earliest date assignable for Thorstein Ericsson's ill-fated voyage, and which is also the date of the event immediately preceding this sentence in the elder texts of the Eyrbyggja Saga.

Red which is not lucid, and which is not reasonably consistent with our present knowledge of the probable regions visited. The incident of the adventure with the Uniped may be passed without especial mention in this connection; it gives evidence of the prevalent superstition of the time, it is true, but it in no way reflects upon the keenness of observation or relative credibility of the explorers. It follows, therefore, that the accounts of the discovery contained in Hauk's Book and AM. 557, 4to, whether they present the eldest form of the narrative of the Wineland explorers or not, do afford the most graphic and succinct exposition of the discovery, and, supported as they are throughout by contemporaneous history, appear in every respect most worthy of credence.

THE SAGA OF ERIC THE RED, ALSO CALLED THE SAGA OF THORFINN KARLSEFNI AND SNORRI THORBRANDSSON.

Olaf was the name of a warrior-king<sup>1</sup>, who was called Olaf the White. He was the son of King Ingiald, Helgi's son, the son of Olaf, Gudraud's<sup>2</sup> son, son of Halfdan Whiteleg<sup>3</sup>, king of the Uplands-men (8). Olaf engaged in a Western freebooting expedition and captured Dublin in Ireland and the Shire of Dublin, over which he became king (9). He married Aud the Wealthy<sup>4</sup>, daughter of Ketil Flatnose<sup>5</sup>, son of Biorn Buna<sup>6</sup>, a famous man of Norway. Their son was called Thorstein the Red<sup>7</sup>. Olaf was killed in battle in Ireland, and Aud (10) and Thorstein went then to the Hebrides (11); there Thorstein married Thurid<sup>8</sup>, daughter of Eyvind Easterling<sup>9</sup>, sister of Helgi the Lean<sup>10</sup>; they had many children. Thorstein became a warrior-king, and entered into fellowship with Earl Sigurd the Mighty<sup>11</sup>, son of Eystein the Rattler<sup>12</sup>. They conquered Caithness and Sutherland, Ross and Moray, and more than the half of Scotland. Over these Thorstein became king, ere he was betrayed by the Scots, and was slain there in battle. Aud was at Caithness when she heard of Thorstein's death; she thereupon caused a ship (12) to be secretly built in the forest, and when she was ready, she sailed out to the Orkneys. There she bestowed Groa, Thorstein the Red's daughter, in marriage; she was the mother of Grelad<sup>13</sup>, whom Earl Thorfinn, Skull-cleaver<sup>14</sup>, married. After this Aud set out to seek Iceland, and had on board her ship twenty freemen (13). Aud arrived in Iceland, and passed the first winter at Biarnarhöfn with her brother, Biorn.

Aud afterwards took possession of all the Dale country (14) between Dögurdar river and Skraumuhlaups river. She lived at Hvamm, and held her orisons at Krossholar, where she caused crosses to be erected, for she had been baptized and was a devout believer. With her there came out [to Iceland] many distinguished men, who had been captured in the Western freebooting expedition, and were called slaves. Vifil was the name of one of these: he was a highborn man, who had been taken captive in the Western sea, and was called a slave, before Aud freed him; now when Aud gave homesteads to the members of her crew, Vifil asked wherefore she gave him no homestead as to the other men. Aud replied, that this should make no difference to him, saying, that he would be regarded as a distinguished man wherever he was. She gave him Vifilsdal (15), and there he dwelt. He married a woman whose name was . . . .<sup>1</sup>; their sons were Thorbiorn and Thorgeir. They were men of promise, and grew up with their father.

There was a man named Thorvald; he was a son of Asvald, Ulf's son, Eyxna-Thori's son. His son's name was Eric<sup>3</sup>. He and his father went from Jaederen (16) to Iceland, on account of manslaughter, and settled on Hornstrandir, and dwelt at Drangar (17). There Thorvald died, and Eric then married Thorhild, a daughter of Jorund, Atli's son, and Thorbiorg the Ship-chested<sup>4</sup>, who had been married before to Thorbiorn of the Haukadal family<sup>5</sup>. Eric then removed from the North, and cleared land in Haukadal, and dwelt at Ericstadir by Vatnshorn. Then Eric's thralls caused a land-slide on Valthiof's farm, Valthiofsstadir. Eyiolf the Foul<sup>6</sup>, Valthiof's kinsman, slew the thralls near Skeidsbrekkur above Vatnshorn. For this Eric killed Eyiolf the Foul, and he also killed Duelling-Hrafn<sup>7</sup>, at Leikskalar. Geirstein and Odd of Jorva, Eyiolf's kinsmen, conducted the prosecution for the slaying of their kinsmen, and Eric was, in consequence, banished from Haukadal. He then took possession of Brokey and Eyxney, and dwelt at Tradir on Sudrey, the first winter (18). It was at this time that he loaned Thorgest his outer daïs-boards (19); Eric afterwards went to Eyxney, and dwelt at Ericstad. He then demanded his outer daïs-boards, but did not obtain them<sup>8</sup>. Eric then carried the outer daïs-boards away from Breidabolstad, and Thorgest gave chase. They came to blows a short distance from the farm of Drangar (20). There two of Thorgest's sons were killed and certain other men besides. After this each of them retained a considerable body of men with him at his home. Styr gave Eric his support, as did also Eyiolf of Sviney, Thorbiorn, Vifil's son, and the sons of Thorbrand of Alptafirth; while Thorgest was backed by the sons of Thord the Yeller<sup>1</sup>, and Thorgeir of Hitardal, Aslak of Langadal and his son, Illugi. Eric and his people were condemned to outlawry at Thorsness-thing (21). He equipped his ship for a voyage, in Ericsvag; while Eyiolf concealed him in Dimunarvag (22), when Thorgest and his people were searching for him among the islands. He said to them, that it was his intention to go in search of that land which Gunnbiorn (23), son of Ulf the Crow<sup>2</sup>, saw when he was driven out of his course, westward across the main, and discovered Gunnbiorns-skerries. He told them that he would return again to his friends, if he should succeed in finding that country. Thorbiorn, and Eyiolf, and Styr accompanied Eric out beyond the islands, and they parted with the greatest friendliness; Eric said to them that he would render them similar aid, so far as it might lie within his power, if they should ever stand in need of his help. Eric sailed out to sea from Snaefells-iokul, and arrived at that ice-mountain (24) which is called Blacksark<sup>3</sup>. Thence he sailed to the southward, that he might ascertain whether there was habitable country in that direction. He passed the first winter at Ericsey, near the middle of the Western-settlement. In the following spring he proceeded to Ericsfirth, and selected a site there for his homestead. That summer he explored the western uninhabited region, remaining there for a long time, and assigning many local names there. The second winter he spent at Ericsholms beyond Hvarfsgnipa. But the third summer he sailed northward to Snaefell, and into Hrafnsfirth. He believed then that he had reached the head of Ericsfirth; he turned back then, and remained the third winter<sup>4</sup> at Ericsey at the mouth of Ericsfirth (25). The following summer he sailed to Iceland, and landed in Breidafirth. He remained that winter with Ingolf (26) at Holmlatr. In the spring he and Thorgest fought together, and Eric was defeated; after this a reconciliation was effected between them. That summer Eric set out to colonize the land which he had discovered, and which he called Greenland, because, he said, men would be the more readily persuaded thither if the land had a good name.

CONCERNING THORBIORN.

Thorgeir, Vifil's son, married, and took to wife Arnora, daughter of Einar of Laugarbrekka, Sigmund's son, son of Ketil Thistil, who settled Thistilsfirth. Einar had another daughter named Hallveig; she was married to Thorbiorn, Vifil's son (27), who got with her Laugarbrekka-land on Hellisvellir. Thorbiorn moved thither, and became a very distinguished man. He was an excellent husbandman<sup>1</sup>, and had a great estate. Gudrid was the name of Thorbiorn's daughter. She was the most beautiful of her sex, and in every respect a very superior woman. There dwelt at Arnarstapi a man named Orm, whose wife's name was Halldis. Orm was a good husbandman, and a great friend of Thorbiorn, and Gudrid lived with him for a long time as a foster-daughter. There was a man named Thorgeir, who lived at Thorgeirsfell (28); he was very wealthy and had been manumitted; he had a son named Einar, who was a handsome, well-bred man, and very showy in his dress. Einar was engaged in trading-voyages from one country to the other, and had prospered in this. He always spent his winters alternately either in Iceland or in Norway.

Now it is to be told, that one autumn, when Einar was in Iceland, he went with his wares out along Snaefellsness<sup>2</sup>, with the intention of selling them. He came to Arnarstapi, and Orm invited him to remain with him, and Einar accepted this invitation, for there was a strong friendship [between Orm and himself]. Einar's wares were carried into a store-house, where he unpacked them, and displayed them to Orm and the men of his household, and asked Orm to take such of them as he liked. Orm accepted this offer, and said that Einar was a good merchant, and was greatly favoured by fortune. Now, while they were busied about the wares, a woman passed before the door of the store-house. Einar enquired of Orm: 'Who was that handsome woman who passed before the door? I have never seen her here before.' Orm replies: 'That is Gudrid, my foster-child, the daughter of Thorbiorn of Laugarbrekka.' 'She must be a good match,' said Einar; 'has she had any suitors?' Orm replies: 'In good sooth she has been courted, friend, nor is she easily to be won, for it is believed that both she and her father will be very particular in their choice of a husband.' 'Be that as it may,' quoth Einar, 'she is the woman to whom I mean to pay my addresses, and I would have thee present this matter to her father in my behalf, and use every exertion to bring it to a favourable issue, and I shall reward thee to the full of my friendship, if I am successful. It may be that Thorbiorn will regard the connection as being to our mutual advantage, for [while] he is a most honourable man and has a goodly home, his personal effects, I am told, are somewhat on the wane<sup>3</sup>; but neither I nor my father are lacking in lands or chattels, and Thorbiorn would be greatly aided thereby, if this match should be brought about.' 'Surely I believe myself to be thy friend,' replies Orm, 'and yet I am by no means disposed to act in this matter, for Thorbiorn hath a very haughty spirit, and is moreover a most ambitious man.' Einar replied that he wished for nought else than that his suit should be broached; Orm replied, that he should have his will. Einar fared again to the South until he reached his home. Sometime after this, Thorbiorn had an autumn feast, as was his custom, for he was a man of high position. Hither came Orm of Arnarstapi, and many other of Thorbiorn's friends. Orm came to speech with Thorbiorn, and said, that Einar of Thorgeirsfell had visited him <sup>1</sup> not long before, and that he was become a very promising man. Orm now makes known the proposal of marriage in Einar's behalf, and added that for some persons and for some reasons it might be regarded as a very appropriate match: 'thou mayest greatly strengthen thyself thereby, master, by reason of the property.' Thorbiorn answers: 'Little did I expect to hear such words from thee, that I should marry my daughter to the son of a thrall (29); and that, because it seems to thee that my means are diminishing, wherefore she shall not remain longer with thee <sup>2</sup> since thou deemest so mean a match as this suitable for her.' Orm afterward returned to his home, and all of the invited guests to their respective households, while Gudrid remained behind with her father, and tarried at home that winter. But in the spring Thorbiorn gave an entertainment to his friends, to which many came <sup>3</sup>, and it was a noble feast, and at the banquet Thorbiorn called for silence, and spoke: 'Here have I passed a goodly lifetime, and have experienced the good-will of men toward me, and their affection; and, methinks, our relations together have been pleasant; but now I begin to find myself in straitened circumstances, although my estate has hitherto been accounted a respectable one. Now will I rather abandon my farming, than lose my honour, and rather leave the country, than bring disgrace upon my family; wherefore I have now concluded to put that promise to the test, which my friend Eric the Red made, when we parted company in Breidafirth. It is my present design to go to Greenland this summer, if matters fare as I wish.' The folk were greatly astonished at this plan of Thorbiorn's <sup>4</sup>, for he was blessed with many friends, but they were convinced that he was so firmly fixed in his purpose, that it would not avail to endeavour to dissuade him from it. Thorbiorn bestowed gifts upon his guests, after which the feast came to an end, and the folk returned to their homes. Thorbiorn sells his lands and buys a ship, which was laid up at the mouth of Hraunhöfn (30). Thirty persons joined him in the voyage; among these were Orm of Arnarstapi, and his wife, and other of Thorbiorn's friends, who would not part from him. Then they put to sea. When they sailed the weather was favourable, but after they came out upon the high-seas the fair wind failed, and there came great gales<sup>1</sup>, and they lost their way, and had a very tedious voyage that summer. Then illness appeared among their people, and Orm and his wife Halldis died, and the half of their company. The sea began to run high, and they had a very wearisome and wretched voyage in many ways, but arrived, nevertheless, at Heriølsness in Greenland, on the very eve of winter<sup>2</sup>. At Heriølsness lived a man named Thorkel. He was a man of ability and an excellent husbandman. He received Thorbiorn and all of his ship's company, and entertained them well during the winter<sup>3</sup>. At that time there was a season of great dearth in Greenland; those who had been at the fisheries had had poor hauls, and some had not returned. There was a certain woman there in the settlement, whose name was Thorbiorg. She was a prophetess, and was called Little Sibyl (31). She had had nine sisters, all of whom were prophetesses, but she was the only one left alive. It was Thorbiorg's custom in the winters, to go to entertainments, and she was especially sought after at the homes of those who were curious to know their fate, or what manner of season might be in store for them; and inasmuch as Thorkel was the chief yeoman in the neighbourhood, it was thought to devolve upon him to find out when the evil time, which was upon them, would cease. Thorkel invited the prophetess to his home, and careful preparations were made for her reception, according to the custom which prevailed, when women of her kind were to be entertained. A high seat was prepared for her, in which a cushion filled with poultry feathers<sup>4</sup>, was placed. When she came in the evening, with the man who had been sent to meet her, she was clad in a dark-blue cloak, fastened with a strap, and set with stones quite down to the hem. She wore glass beads around her neck, and upon her head a black lamb-skin hood, lined with white cat-skin. In her hands she carried a staff, upon which there was a knob, which was ornamented with brass, and set with stones up about the knob. Circling her waist she wore a girdle of touch-wood, and attached to it a great skin pouch, in which she kept the charms which she used when she was practising her sorcery. She wore upon her feet shaggy calf-skin shoes, with long, tough latches, upon the ends of which there were large brass buttons<sup>5</sup>. She had cat-skin gloves upon her hands, which were white inside and lined with fur. When she entered, all of the folk felt it to be their duty to offer her becoming greetings. She received the salutations of each individual according as he pleased her. Yeoman Thorkel took the sibyl by the hand, and led her to the seat which had been made ready for her. Thorkel bade her run her eyes over man and beast and home. She had little to say concerning all these. The tables were brought forth in the evening, and it remains to be told what manner of food was prepared for the prophetess. A porridge of goat's beestings was made for her, and for meat there were dressed the hearts of every kind of beast, which could be obtained there. She had a brass spoon, and a knife with a handle of walrus tusk, with a double hasp of brass around the haft, and from this the point was broken. And when the tables were removed, Yeoman Thorkel approaches Thorbiorg, and asks how she is pleased with the home, and the character of the folk, and how speedily she would be likely to become aware of that concerning which he had questioned her, and which the people were anxious to know. She replied that she could not give an opinion in this matter before the morrow, after that she had slept there through the night. And on the morrow, when the day was far spent, such preparations were made as were necessary to enable her to accomplish her soothsaying. She bade them bring her those women, who knew the incantation, which she required to work her spells, and which she called Warlocks; but such women were not to be found. Thereupon a search was made throughout the house, to see whether any one knew this [incantation]. Then says Gudrid: 'Although I am neither skilled in the black art nor a sibyl, yet my foster-mother, Halldis, taught me in Iceland that spell-song, which she called Warlocks.' Thorbiorg answered: 'Then art thou wise in season<sup>1</sup>!' Gudrid replies: 'This is an incantation and ceremony of such a kind, that I do not mean to lend it any aid, for that I am a Christian woman.' Thorbiorg answers: 'It might so be that thou couldst give thy help to the company here, and still be no worse woman than before; however I leave it with Thorkel to provide for my needs.' Thorkel now so urged Gudrid, that she said she must needs comply with his wishes. The women then made a ring round about, while Thorbiorg sat up on the spell-daís. Gudrid then sang the song, so sweet and well, that no one remembered ever before to have heard the melody sung with so fair a voice as this. The sorceress thanked her for the song, and said: 'She has indeed lured many spirits hither, who think it pleasant to hear this song, those who were wont to forsake us hitherto and refuse to submit themselves to us. Many things are now revealed to me, which hitherto have been hidden, both from me and from others. And I am able to announce that this period of famine will not endure longer, but the season will mend as spring approaches. The visitation of disease, which has been so long upon you, will disappear sooner than expected. And thee, Gudrid, I shall reward out of hand, for the assistance, which thou hast vouchsafed us, since the fate in store for thee is now all made manifest to me. Thou shalt make a most worthy match here in Greenland, but it shall not be of long duration for thee, for thy future<sup>2</sup> path leads out to Iceland, and a lineage both great and goodly shall spring from thee, and above thy line brighter rays of light shall shine, than I have power clearly to unfold<sup>1</sup>. And now fare well and health to thee, my daughter!' After this the folk advanced to the sibyl, and each besought information concerning that about which he was most curious. She was very ready in her responses, and little of that which she foretold failed of fulfilment. After this they came for her from a neighbouring farmstead, and she thereupon set out thither. Thorbiorn was then sent for, since he had not been willing to remain at home while such heathen rites<sup>2</sup> were practising. The weather improved speedily, when the spring opened<sup>3</sup>, even as Thorbiorg had prophesied. Thorbiorn equipped his ship and sailed away, until he arrived at Brattahlid. Eric received him with open arms<sup>4</sup>, and said that it was well that he had come thither. Thorbiorn and his household remained with him during the winter, while quarters were provided for the crew among the farmers. And the following spring Eric gave Thorbiorn land on Stokkaness, where a goodly farmstead was founded, and there he lived thenceforward.

CONCERNING LEIF THE LUCKY AND THE INTRODUCTION OF CHRISTIANITY INTO GREENLAND.

Eric was married to a woman named Thorhild<sup>5</sup>, and had two sons; one of these was named Thorstein, and the other Leif. They were both promising men. Thorstein lived at home with his father, and there was not at that time a man in Greenland who was accounted of so great promise as he. Leif had sailed (32) to Norway, where he was at the court of King Olaf Tryggvason. When Leif sailed from Greenland, in the summer, they were driven out of their course to the Hebrides. It was late before they got fair winds thence, and they remained there far into the summer. Leif became enamoured of a certain woman, whose name was Thorgunna. She was a woman of fine family, and Leif observed that she was possessed of rare intelligence<sup>6</sup> (33). When Leif was preparing for his departure Thorgunna (34) asked to be permitted to accompany him. Leif enquired whether she had in this the approval of her kinsmen. She replied that she did not care for it. Leif responded that he did not deem it the part of wisdom to abduct so high-born a woman in a strange country, 'and we so few in number.' 'It is by no means certain that thou shalt find this to be the better decision,' said Thorgunna. 'I shall put it to the proof, notwithstanding,' said Leif. 'Then I tell thee,' said Thorgunna, 'that I am no longer a lone woman, for I am pregnant, and upon thee I charge it. I foresee that I shall give birth to a male child. And though thou give this no heed, yet will I rear the boy, and send him to thee in Greenland, when he shall be fit to take his place with other men. And I foresee that thou wilt get as much profit of this son as is thy due from this our parting; moreover, I mean to come to Greenland myself before the end comes.' Leif gave her a gold finger-ring, a Greenland wadmal mantle, and a belt of walrus-tusk. This boy came to Greenland, and was called Thorgils. Leif acknowledged his paternity, and some men will have it that this Thorgils came to Iceland in the summer before the Fróda-wonder (35). However, this Thorgils was afterwards in Greenland, and there seemed to be something not altogether natural about him before the end came. Leif and his companions sailed away from the Hebrides, and arrived in Norway in the autumn. Leif went to the court of King Olaf Tryggvason. He was well received by the king, who felt that he could see that Leif was a man of great accomplishments. Upon one occasion the king came to speech with Leif, and asks him, 'Is it thy purpose to sail to Greenland in the summer?' 'It is my purpose,' said Leif, 'if it be your will.' 'I believe it will be well,' answers the king, 'and thither thou shalt go upon my errand, to proclaim Christianity there.' Leif replied that the king should decide, but gave it as his belief that it would be difficult to carry this mission to a successful issue in Greenland. The king replied that he knew of no man who would be better fitted for this undertaking, 'and in thy hands the cause will surely prosper.' 'This can only be,' said Leif, 'if I enjoy the grace of your protection.' Leif put to sea when his ship was ready for the voyage. For a long time he was tossed about upon the ocean, and came upon lands of which he had previously had no knowledge. There were self-sown wheat fields and vines growing there. There were also those trees there which are called 'mausur' (36), and of all these they took specimens. Some of the timbers were so large that they were used in building. Leif found men upon a wreck, and took them home with him, and procured quarters for them all during the winter. In this wise he showed his nobleness and goodness, since he introduced Christianity into the country, and saved the men from the wreck<sup>1</sup>; and he was called Leif the Lucky<sup>2</sup> ever after. Leif landed in Ericsfirth, and then went home to Brattahlid; he was well received by every one. He soon proclaimed Christianity throughout the land, and the Catholic faith, and announced King Olaf Tryggvason's messages to the people, telling them how much excellence and how great glory accompanied this faith. Eric was slow in forming the determination to forsake his old belief, but Thiodhild (37) embraced the faith promptly, and caused a church to be built at some distance from the house. This building was called Thiodhild's Church, and there she and those persons who had accepted Christianity, and they were many, were wont to offer their prayers. Thiodhild would not have intercourse with Eric after that she had received the faith, whereat he was sorely vexed.

At this time there began to be much talk about a voyage of exploration<sup>1</sup> to that country which Leif had discovered. The leader of this expedition was Thorstein Ericsson, who was a good man and an intelligent, and blessed with many friends. Eric was likewise invited to join them, for the men believed that his luck and foresight would be of great furtherance. He was slow in deciding, but did not say nay, when his friends besought him to go. They thereupon equipped that ship in which Thorbiorn had come out, and twenty men were selected for the expedition. They took little cargo with them, nought else save their weapons and provisions<sup>2</sup>. On that morning when Eric set out from his home he took with him a little chest containing gold and silver; he hid this treasure, and then went his way. He had proceeded but a short distance, however, when he fell from his horse and broke his ribs and dislocated his shoulder<sup>3</sup>, whereat he cried 'Ai, ai<sup>4</sup>!' By reason of this accident he sent his wife word<sup>5</sup> that she should procure the treasure which he had concealed, for to the hiding of the treasure he attributed his misfortune (38). Thereafter they sailed cheerily out of Ericsfirth in high spirits over their plan. They were long tossed about upon the ocean, and could not lay the course they wished. They came in sight of Iceland, and likewise saw birds from the Irish coast<sup>6</sup>. Their ship was, in sooth, driven hither and thither over the sea. In the autumn they turned back, worn out by toil, and exposure to the elements, and exhausted by their labours, and arrived at Ericsfirth at the very beginning of winter. Then said Eric, 'More cheerful were we<sup>7</sup> in the summer, when we put out of the firth, but we still live<sup>8</sup>, and it might have been much worse<sup>9</sup>.' Thorstein answers, 'It will be a princely deed to endeavour to look well after the wants of all these men who are now in need, and to make provision for them during the winter.' Eric answers, 'It is ever true, as it is said, that "it is never clear ere the answer comes," and so it

Now it is to be told that Thorstein Ericsson sought Gudrid, Thorbiorn's daughter, in wedlock. His suit was favourably received both by herself and by her father, and it was decided that Thorstein should marry Gudrid, and the wedding was held at Brattahlid in the autumn. The entertainment sped well, and was very numerously attended. Thorstein had a home in the Western-settlement at a certain farmstead, which is called Lysufirth. A half interest in this property belonged to a man named Thorstein, whose wife's name was Sigrid. Thorstein went to Lysufirth, in the autumn, to his namesake, and Gudrid bore him company<sup>3</sup>. They were well received, and remained there during the winter. It came to pass that sickness appeared in their home early in the winter. Gard was the name of the overseer there; he had few friends; he took sick first, and died. It was not long before one after another took sick and died. Then Thorstein, Eric's son, fell sick, and Sigrid, the wife of Thorstein, his namesake; and one evening Sigrid wished to go to the house, which stood over against the outer-door, and Gudrid accompanied her; they were facing the outer-door when Sigrid uttered a loud cry<sup>4</sup>. 'We have acted thoughtlessly,' exclaimed Gudrid, 'yet thou needest not cry, though the cold strikes thee<sup>5</sup>; let us go in again as speedily as possible.' Sigrid answers, 'This may not be in this present plight. All of the dead folk are drawn up here before the door now; among them I see thy husband, Thorstein, and I can see myself there, and it is distressful to look upon.' But directly this had passed she exclaimed, 'Let us go now, Gudrid; I no longer see the band!' The overseer<sup>6</sup> had vanished from her sight, whereas it had seemed to her before that he stood with a whip in his hand and made as if he would scourge the flock. So they went in, and ere the morning came she was dead, and a coffin was made ready for the corpse; and that same day the men planned to row out to fish, and Thorstein accompanied them to the landing-place, and in the twilight<sup>7</sup> he went down to see their catch. Thorstein, Eric's son, then sent word to his namesake that he should come to him, saying that all was not as it should be there<sup>1</sup>, for the housewife was endeavouring to rise to her feet, and wished to get in under the clothes beside him, and when he entered the room she was come up on the edge of the bed. He thereupon seized her hands and held a pole-axe (39) before her breast. Thorstein, Eric's son, died before night-fall. Thorstein, the master of the house, bade Gudrid lie down and sleep, saying that he would keep watch over the bodies during the night; thus she did, and early in the night, Thorstein, Eric's son, sat up and spoke, saying that he desired Gudrid to be called thither, for that it was his wish to speak with her: 'It is God's will that this hour be given me for my own and for the betterment of my condition.' Thorstein, the master, went in search of Gudrid, and waked her, and bade her cross herself, and pray God to help her; 'Thorstein, Eric's son, has said to me that he wishes to see thee<sup>2</sup>; thou must take counsel with thyself now, what thou wilt do, for I have no advice to give thee.' She replies, 'It may be that this is intended to be one of those incidents which shall afterward be held in remembrance, this strange event, and it is my trust that God will keep watch over me; wherefore, under God's mercy, I shall venture to go to him, and learn what it is that he would say, for I may not escape this if it be designed to bring me harm. I will do this, lest he go further, for it is my belief that the matter is a grave one.' So Gudrid went and drew near to Thorstein, and he seemed to her to be weeping. He spoke a few words in her ear, in a low tone, so that she alone could hear them; but this he said so that all could hear, that those persons would be blessed who kept well the faith, and that it carried with it all help and consolation, and yet many there were, said he, who kept it but ill. 'This is no proper usage, which has obtained here in Greenland since Christianity was introduced here, to inter men in unconsecrated<sup>3</sup> earth, with nought but a brief funeral service. It is my wish that I be conveyed to the church, together with the others who have died here; Gard<sup>4</sup>, however, I would have you burn upon a pyre, as speedily as possible, since he has been the cause of all of the apparitions which have been seen here during the winter.' He spoke to her also of her own destiny, and said that she had a notable future in store for her, but he bade her beware of marrying any Greenlander; he directed her also to give their property to the church and to the poor<sup>5</sup>, and then sank down again a second time. It had been the custom in Greenland, after Christianity was introduced there, to bury persons on the farmsteads where they died, in unconsecrated<sup>3</sup> earth; a pole was erected in the ground, touching the breast of the dead, and subsequently, when the priests came thither, the pole was withdrawn and holy water poured in [the orifice], and the funeral service held there, although it might be long thereafter. The bodies of the dead<sup>1</sup> were conveyed to the church at Ericsfirth, and the funeral services held there by the clergy. Thorbiorn died soon after this, and all of his property then passed into Gudrid's possession. Eric took her to his home and carefully looked after her affairs<sup>2</sup>.

CONCERNING THORD OF HÖFDI.

There was a man named Thord, who lived at Höfdi on Höfdi-strands. He married Fridgerd, daughter of Thori the Loiterer<sup>3</sup> and Fridgerd, daughter of Kierval the King of the Irish. Thord was a son of Biorn Chestbutter<sup>4</sup>, son of Thorvald Spine<sup>5</sup>, Asleik's son, the son of Biorn Iron-side<sup>6</sup>, the son of Ragnar Shaggy-breeks<sup>7</sup>. They had a son named Snorri. He married Thorhild Ptarmigan<sup>8</sup>, daughter of Thord the Yeller<sup>9</sup>. Their son was Thord Horse-head<sup>10</sup>. Thorfinn Karlsefni<sup>11</sup> was the name of Thord's son (40). Thorfinn's mother's name was Thorunn<sup>12</sup>. Thorfinn was engaged in trading voyages, and was reputed to be a successful merchant. One summer Karlsefni equipped his ship, with the intention of sailing to Greenland. Snorri, Thorbrand's son<sup>13</sup>, of Alptafirth (41) accompanied him, and there were forty men on board the ship with them. There was a man named Biarni, Grimolf's son, a man from Breidafirth, and another named Thorhall, Gamli's son (42), an East-firth man. They equipped their ship, the same summer as Karlsefni, with the intention of making a voyage to Greenland; they had also forty men in their ship. When they were ready to sail, the two ships put to sea together<sup>14</sup>. It has not been recorded how long a voyage they had; but it is to be told, that both of the ships arrived at Ericsfirth in the autumn. Eric and other of the inhabitants of the country rode to the ships, and a goodly trade was soon established between them. Gudrid<sup>15</sup> was requested by the skippers to take such of their wares as she wished, while Eric, on his part, showed great munificence in return, in that he extended an invitation to both crews to accompany him home for winter quarters at Brattahlid. The merchants accepted this invitation<sup>1</sup>, and went with Eric. Their wares were then conveyed to Brattahlid; nor was there lack there of good and commodious store-houses, in which to keep them; nor was there wanting much of that, which they needed, and the merchants were well pleased with their entertainment at Eric's home during that winter. Now as it drew toward Yule, Eric became very taciturn, and less cheerful than had been his wont. On one occasion Karlsefni entered into conversation with Eric, and said: 'Hast thou aught weighing upon thee, Eric? The folk have remarked, that thou art somewhat more silent<sup>2</sup> than thou hast been hitherto. Thou hast entertained us with great liberality, and it behooves us to make such return as may lie within our power. Do thou now but make known the cause of thy melancholy.' Eric answers: 'Ye accept hospitality gracefully, and in manly wise, and I am not pleased that ye should be the sufferers by reason of our intercourse; rather am I troubled at the thought, that it should be given out elsewhere, that ye have never passed a worse Yule than this, now drawing nigh, when Eric the Red was your host at Brattahlid in Greenland.' 'There shall be no cause for that,' replies Karlsefni, 'we have malt, and meal, and corn in our ships, and you are welcome to take of these whatsoever you wish, and to provide as liberal an entertainment as seems fitting to you.' Eric accepts this offer, and preparations were made for the Yule feast (43), and it was so sumptuous, that it seemed to the people they had scarcely ever seen so grand an entertainment before<sup>3</sup>. And after Yule, Karlsefni broached the subject of a marriage with Gudrid to Eric, for he assumed that with him rested the right to bestow her hand in marriage<sup>4</sup>. Eric answers favourably, and says, that she would accomplish the fate in store for her, adding that he had heard only good reports of him<sup>5</sup>. And, not to prolong this, the result was, that Thorfinn was betrothed to Thurid, and the banquet was augmented, and their wedding was celebrated<sup>6</sup>; and this befell at Brattahlid during the winter<sup>7</sup>.

BEGINNING OF THE WINELAND VOYAGES.

About this time there began to be much talk at Brattahlid, to the effect that Wineland the Good should be explored, for, it was said, that country must be possessed of many goodly qualities. And so it came to pass, that Karlsefni and Snorri fitted out their ship, for the purpose of going in search of that country in the spring<sup>1</sup>. Biarni and Thorhall joined the expedition with their ship, and the men who had borne them company<sup>2</sup>. There was a man named Thorvard; he was wedded to Freydis (44), a natural daughter of Eric the Red. He also accompanied them, together with Thorvald, Eric's son, and Thorhall, who was called the Huntsman. He had been for a long time with Eric as his hunter and fisherman during the summer, and as his steward during the winter<sup>3</sup>. Thorhall was stout and swarthy, and of giant stature; he was a man of few words, though given to abusive language, when he did speak, and he ever incited Eric to evil. He was a poor Christian; he had a wide knowledge of the unsettled regions<sup>4</sup>. He was on the same ship with Thorvard and Thorvald<sup>5</sup>. They had that ship which Thorbiorn had brought out. They had in all one hundred and sixty men, when they sailed to the Western-settlement (45), and thence to Bear Island<sup>6</sup>. Thence they bore away to the southward two 'dœgr' (46). Then they saw land, and launched a boat, and explored the land, and

<sup>1</sup> EsR: 'Karlsefni and Snorri determined to go in search of Wineland, and this gave rise to much talk.' [Cf. preceding note.] 'And the end of the matter was, that Karlsefni and Snorri equipped their ship and determined to go in search of Wineland during the summer.'

<sup>2</sup> PsK: 'With them went also that man, who was named Biarni, and likewise Thorhall, who have before been mentioned, with their ship.'

<sup>3</sup> EsR: 'There was a man named Thorvald; he was a relative by marriage of Eric the Red. Thorhall was called the Huntsman [veiðimaðr]; he had long lived with Eric, engaging in fishing and hunting expeditions during the summer, and was general care-taker' [lit. had many things under his charge].

<sup>4</sup> EsR: 'Thorhall was a man of great stature, swart and giant-like; he was rather stricken with years, overbearing in manner, taciturn, and usually a man of few words, underhanded in his dealings, and yet given to offensive language, and always ready to stir up evil; he had concerned himself little with the true faith after its introduction into Greenland. Thorhall was not very popular, but Eric had long been accustomed to seek his advice.'

<sup>6</sup> EsR: 'and they joined Karlsefni and his companions in their expedition, and they were mostly Greenland men on board. There were on their ships forty men off the second hundred [i.e. one hundred and sixty men]. Then they sailed away to the Western-settlement, and to the Bear Isles.' PsK has, 'xl. men and c;,' but as the early duodecimal hundred of twelve tens is doubtless meant by c,' the numbers agree in both accounts.

found there large flat stones [hellur], and many of these were twelve ells wide; there were many Arctic foxes there. They gave a name to the country, and called it Helluland [the land of flat stones]<sup>1</sup>. Then they sailed with northerly winds two ‘dœgr,’ and land then lay before them, and upon it was a great wood and many wild beasts; an island lay off the land to the south-east, and there they found a bear, and they called this Biarney [Bear Island], while the land where the wood was they called Markland [Forest-land]<sup>2</sup>. Thence they sailed southward along the land for a long time, and came to a cape; the land lay upon the starboard; there were long strands and sandy banks there. They rowed to the land and found upon the cape there the keel of a ship (47), and they called it there Kialarnes [Keelness]; they also called the strands Furdstrandir [Wonder-strands], because they were so long to sail by<sup>3</sup>. Then the country became indented with bays, and they steered their ships into a bay<sup>4</sup>. It was when Leif was with King Olaf Tryggvason, and he bade him proclaim Christianity to Greenland, that the king gave him two Gaels (48); the man’s name was Haki, and the woman’s Haekia. The king advised Leif to have recourse to these people, if he should stand in need of fleetness, for they were swifter than deer<sup>5</sup>. Eric and Leif had tendered Karlsefni the services of this couple. Now when they had sailed past Wonder-strands, they put the Gaels ashore, and directed them to run to the southward, and investigate the nature of the country, and return again before the end of the third half-day. They were each clad in a garment, which they called ‘kiafal’<sup>6</sup>, which was so fashioned, that it had a hood at the top, was open at the sides, was sleeveless, and was fastened between the legs with buttons and loops, while elsewhere they were naked. Karlsefni and his companions cast anchor, and lay there during

<sup>1</sup> EsR: ‘Thence they sailed away beyond the Bear Isles, with northerly winds. They were out two “dœgr,” then they discovered land, and rowed thither in boats, and explored the country, and found there many flat stones [hellur], so large, that two men could well spurn soles upon them’ [i.e. lie at full length upon them, sole to sole]; ‘there were many Arctic foxes there.’

<sup>2</sup> PsK: ‘Thence they sailed two “dœgr,” and bore away from the south toward the south-east, and they found a wooded country, and on it many animals; an island lay there off the land toward the south-east; they killed a bear on this [island], and called it afterwards Bear Isle, but the country Forest-land.’

<sup>3</sup> EsR: ‘Then when two “dœgr” had elapsed, they descried land, and they sailed off this land; there was a cape to which they came. They beat into the wind along this coast, having the land upon the starboard side. This was a bleak coast, with long and sandy shores. They went ashore in boats, and found the keel of a ship, so they called it Keelness there; they likewise gave a name to the strands, and called them Wonder-strands, because they were long to sail by.’

<sup>5</sup> PsK: ‘King Olaf Tryggvason had given Leif two Gaelic people, the man’s name was Haki, and she Hekia. They were flecter than deer. These people were on board Karlsefni’s ship.’

their absence<sup>1</sup>; and when they came again, one of them carried<sup>2</sup> a bunch of grapes, and the other an ear of new-sown wheat<sup>3</sup>. They went on board the ship, whereupon Karlsefni and his followers held on their way, until they came to where the coast was indented with bays. They stood into a bay with their ships. There was an island out at the mouth of the bay, about which there were strong currents, wherefore they called it Straumey [Stream Isle]. There were so many birds there, that it was scarcely possible to step between the eggs<sup>4</sup>. They sailed through the firth, and called it Straumfird [Streamfirth], and carried their cargoes ashore from the ships, and established themselves there. They had brought with them all kinds of live-stock. It was a fine country there. There were mountains thereabouts. They occupied themselves exclusively with the exploration of the country. They remained there during the winter, and they had taken no thought for this during the summer. The fishing began to fail, and they began to fall short of food<sup>5</sup>. Then Thorhall the Huntsman disappeared. They had already prayed to God for food, but it did not come as promptly as their necessities seemed to demand. They searched for Thorhall for three half-days, and found him<sup>6</sup> on a projecting crag. He was lying there, and looking up at the sky, with mouth and nostrils agape, and mumbling something<sup>7</sup>. They asked him why he had gone thither; he replied, that this did not concern anyone<sup>8</sup>. They asked him then to go home with them, and he did so. Soon after this a whale appeared there, and they captured it<sup>9</sup>, and flensed it, and no one could tell what manner of whale it was<sup>10</sup>; and when the cooks had prepared

<sup>3</sup> EsR: 'and when three days [sic] had passed, they ran down from the land, and one of them carried in the hand a wine-vessel' [vín-ker, doubtless a clerical error for 'vín-ber,' grapes], 'and the other wheat self-sown. Karlsefni said that they seemed to have found goodly indigenous products!'

<sup>4</sup> ÞsK: 'There were so many eider-ducks on the island, that it was scarcely possible to walk for the eggs.'

<sup>5</sup> EsR: 'they explored the nature of the land. There were mountains there, and the country round about was fair to look upon. They did nought but explore the country. There was tall grass there. They remained there during the winter, and they had a hard winter, for which they had not prepared, and they grew short of food, and the fishing fell off. Then they went out to the island, in the hope that something might be forthcoming in the way of fishing or flotsam. There was little food left, however, although their live-stock fared well there. Then they invoked God, that he might send them food, but they did not get response so soon as they needed. Thorhall disappeared,' &c.

<sup>8</sup> EsR adds, 'he told them not to be surprised at this; adding that he had lived sufficiently long to render it unnecessary for them to take counsel for him.'

it, they ate of it, and were all made ill by it. Then Thorhall, approaching them, says: 'Did not the Red-beard (49) prove more helpful than your Christ? This is my reward for the verses which I composed to Thor, the Trustworthy<sup>1</sup>; seldom has he failed me.' When the people heard this, they cast the whale down into the sea, and made their appeals to God<sup>2</sup>. The weather then improved, and they could now row out to fish, and thenceforward they had no lack of provisions, for they could hunt game on the land, gather eggs on the island, and catch fish from the sea<sup>3</sup>.

CONCERNING KARLSEFNI AND THORHALL.

It is said, that Thorhall wished to sail to the northward beyond Wonder-strands, in search of Wineland, while Karlsefni desired to proceed to the southward, off the coast<sup>4</sup>. Thorhall prepared for his voyage out below the island, having only nine men in his party, for all of the remainder of the company went with Karlsefni. And one day when Thorhall was carrying water aboard his ship, and was drinking, he recited this ditty:

When I came, these brave men told me,
 Here the best of drink I'd get,
 Now with water-pail behold me,—
 Wine and I are strangers yet.
 Stooping at the spring, I've tested
 All the wine this land affords;
 Of its vaunted charms divested,

<sup>2</sup> EsR: 'and when the people knew this, none of them would eat, and they cast [it] down over the rocks, and invoked God's mercy.'

<sup>3</sup> EsR: 'They were then able to row out to fish, and they had no longer any lack of the necessities of life. In the spring they went into Streamfirth, and obtained provisions from both regions, hunting on the mainland, gathering eggs, and deep-sea fishing.'

<sup>4</sup> EsR: This introductory paragraph reads: 'Now they took counsel together concerning their expedition, and came to an agreement. Thorhall the Huntsman wished to go northward around Wonder-strands, and past Keelness, and so seek Wineland; while Karlsefni wished to proceed southward along the land and to the eastward, believing that country to be greater, which is farther to the southward, and it seemed to him more advisable to explore both.'

<sup>5</sup> The order of the words of the verse is as follows: Meid̄ar [trees] málm þings [of the metal-meeting, i. e. of battle, trees of battle, warriors, men] kváðu mik hafa [said that I should have] drykk inn bazta [the best of drink], er ek kom hingat [when I came hither], mér samir lasta land fyrir lýðum [it behooves me to blame the land 'fore all]; b̄lds hattar [b̄ldr, an instrument for letting blood, i. e. a sword, b̄lds hattar, the sword's hat, i. e. the helmet] beiðitýr [the god who demands, wherefore, b̄lds hattar

And when they were ready, they hoisted sail; whereupon Thorhall recited this ditty<sup>1</sup>:

Comrades, let us now be faring
 Homeward to our own again!
 Let us try the sea-steed's daring,
 Give the chafing courser rein.
 Those who will may bide in quiet,
 Let them praise their chosen land,
 Feasting on a whale-steak diet,
 In their home by Wonder-strand<sup>2</sup>.

Then they sailed away to the northward past Wonder-strands and Keelness, intending to cruise to the westward around the cape. They encountered westerly gales, and were driven ashore in Ireland, where they were grievously maltreated and thrown into slavery. There Thorhall lost his life, according to that which traders have related.

It is now to be told of Karlsefni, that he cruised southward off the coast, with Snorri and Biarni, and their people. They sailed for a long time, and until they came beiðitýr, he, or the god, who demands the helmet, the warrior, i. e. man], ek verð at reiða byttu [I must bear the pail]; heldr er svá at ek krýp at keldu [I have rather to stoop to the spring]; komat vín á grön mína [wine has not touched my lips].

The prose sense of the verse is: Men promised me, when I came hither, that I should have the best of drink, it behooves me before all to blame the land, [PsK] ['little to blame it,' EsR]. See, oh, man! how I must raise the pail; instead of drinking wine, I have to stoop to the spring.

The prose sense of the verse is: Let us return to our countrymen, leaving those, who like the country here, to cook their whale on Wonder-strands.

EsR has ærir for órir, and kæti for kenni, which words are not readily intelligible. The paper manuscripts have still other variants, certain of them clearly unintelligible. The verse, as given in PsK, appears to be the least corrupted. The form órir, nom. plur. from várr, disappeared at the beginning of the thirteenth century, being supplanted by the form várir. [Cf. Konr. Gíslason, Ældre og nyere Böining af Første Persons Plural-possessiv i Oldnordisk-Islandsk., in Aarb. for nord. Oldk. og Hist. 1889, pp. 343 et seq.] From this it is apparent that the verse is much older than either text of the saga which we have, and must have been composed at least a hundred years before Hauk's Book was written; although it may well be much older than the beginning of the thirteenth century.

at last to a river, which flowed down from the land into a lake, and so into the sea. There were great bars at the mouth of the river, so that it could only be entered at the height of the flood-tide. Karlsefni and his men sailed into the mouth of the river, and called it there Hóp [a small land-locked bay]. They found self-sown wheat-fields on the land there, wherever there were hollows, and wherever there was hilly ground, there were vines (50). Every brook there was full of fish. They dug pits, on the shore where the tide rose highest, and when the tide fell, there were halibut (51) in the pits. There were great numbers of wild animals of all kinds in the woods. They remained there half a month, and enjoyed themselves, and kept no watch. They had their live-stock with them. Now one morning early, when they looked about them, they saw a great number of skin-canoes<sup>1</sup>, and staves (52) were brandished from the boats, with a noise like flails, and they were revolved in the same direction in which the sun moves. Then said Karlsefni: 'What may this betoken?' Snorri, Thorbrand's son, answers him: 'It may be, that this is a signal of peace, wherefore let us take a white shield (53) and display it.' And thus they did. Thereupon the strangers rowed toward them, and went upon the land, marvelling at those whom they saw before them. They were swarthy men<sup>2</sup>, and ill-looking, and the hair of their heads was ugly. They had great eyes, and were broad of cheek (54). They tarried there for a time looking curiously at the people they saw before them, and then rowed away, and to the southward around the point.

Karlsefni and his followers had built their huts above the lake, some of their dwellings being near the lake, and others farther away<sup>3</sup>. Now they remained there that winter. No snow came there<sup>4</sup>, and all of their live-stock lived by grazing (55). And when spring opened, they discovered, early one morning, a great number of skin-canoes, rowing from the south past the cape, so numerous, that it looked as if coals had been scattered broadcast out before the bay; and on every boat staves were waved. Thereupon Karlsefni and his people displayed their shields, and when they came together, they began to barter with each other. Especially did the strangers wish to buy red cloth<sup>5</sup>, for which they offered in exchange peltries and quite grey skins. They also desired to buy swords and spears, but Karlsefni and Snorri forbade this. In exchange for perfect unsullied skins, the Skrellings would take red stuff a span in length, which they would bind around their heads. So their trade went on for a time, until Karlsefni and his people began to grow short of cloth, when they divided it into such narrow pieces, that it was not more than a finger's breadth wide, but the Skrellings still continued to give just as much for this as before, or more.

It so happened, that a bull, which belonged to Karlsefni and his people, ran out from the woods, bellowing loudly. This so terrified the Skrellings, that they sped out to their canoes, and then rowed away to the southward along the coast. For three entire weeks nothing more was seen of them. At the end of this time, however, a great multitude of Skrelling boats was discovered approaching from the south, as if a stream were pouring down, and all of their staves were waved in a direction contrary to the course of the sun, and the Skrellings were all uttering loud cries. Thereupon Karlsefni and his men took red shields (53) and displayed them. The Skrellings sprang from their boats, and they met then, and fought together. There was a fierce shower of missiles, for the Skrellings had war-slings. Karlsefni and Snorri observed, that the Skrellings raised up on a pole<sup>1</sup> a great ball-shaped body, almost the size of a sheep's belly, and nearly black in colour, and this they hurled from the pole up on the land above Karlsefni's followers, and it made a frightful noise, where it fell. Whereat a great fear seized upon Karlsefni, and all his men, so that they could think of nought but flight, and of making their escape up along the river bank, for it seemed to them, that the troop of the Skrellings was rushing towards them from every side, and they did not pause, until they came to certain jutting crags, where they offered a stout resistance. Freydis came out, and seeing that Karlsefni and his men were fleeing, she cried: 'Why do ye flee from these wretches, such worthy men as ye, when, meseems, ye might slaughter them like cattle. Had I but a weapon, methinks, I would fight better than any one of you!' They gave no heed to her words. Freydis sought to join them, but lagged behind, for she was not hale<sup>2</sup>; she followed them, however, into the forest, while the Skrellings pursued her; she found a dead man in front of her; this was Thorbrand, Snorri's son, his skull cleft by a flat stone; his naked sword lay beside him; she took it up, and prepared to defend herself with it. The Skrellings then approached her, whereupon she stripped down her shift, and slapped her breast with the naked sword. At this the Skrellings were terrified and ran down to their boats, and rowed away. Karlsefni and his companions, however, joined her and praised her valour. Two of Karlsefni's men had fallen, and a great number of the Skrellings<sup>3</sup>. Karlsefni's party had been overpowered by dint of superior numbers. They now returned to their dwellings, and bound up their wounds, and weighed carefully what throng of men that could have been, which had seemed to descend upon them from the land<sup>4</sup>; it now seemed to them, that there

could have been but the one party, that which came from the boats, and that the other troop must have been an ocular delusion<sup>1</sup>. The Skrellings, moreover, found a dead man, and an axe lay beside him. One of their number picked up the axe, and struck at a tree with it, and one after another [they tested it], and it seemed to them to be a treasure, and to cut well; then one of their number seized it, and hewed at a stone with it, so that the axe broke, whereat they concluded that it could be of no use, since it would not withstand stone, and they cast it away<sup>2</sup>.

It now seemed clear to Karlsefni and his people, that although the country thereabouts was attractive, their life would be one of constant dread and turmoil by reason of the [hostility of the] inhabitants<sup>3</sup> of the country, so they forthwith prepared to leave, and determined to return to their own country. They sailed to the northward off the coast, and found five Skrellings, clad in skin-doublets, lying asleep near the sea. There were vessels beside them, containing animal marrow, mixed with blood. Karlsefni and his company concluded that they must have been banished from their own land. They put them to death. They afterwards found a cape, upon which there was a great number of animals, and this cape looked as if it were one cake of dung, by reason of the animals which lay there at night<sup>4</sup>. They now arrived again at Streamfirth, where they found great abundance of all those things of which they stood in need. Some men say, that Biarni and Freydis<sup>5</sup> remained behind here with a hundred men, and went no further; while Karlsefni and Snorri proceeded to the southward with forty men, tarrying at Hóp barely two months, and returning again the same summer. Karlsefni then set out with one ship, in search of Thorhall the Huntsman, but the greater part of the company remained behind. They sailed to the northward around Keelness, and then bore to the westward, having land to the larboard. The country there was a wooded wilderness, as far as they could see, with scarcely an open space<sup>6</sup>; and when they had journeyed a considerable distance, a river flowed down from the east toward the west. They sailed into the mouth of the river, and lay to by the southern bank.

THE SLAYING OF THORVALD, ERIC'S SON.

It happened one morning, that Karlsefni and his companions discovered in an open space in the woods above them, a speck, which seemed to shine toward them, and they shouted at it: it stirred, and it was a Uniped (56), who skipped down to the bank of the river by which they were lying. Thorvald, a son of Eric the Red, was sitting at the helm, and the Uniped shot an arrow into his inwards. Thorvald drew out the arrow, and exclaimed: 'There is fat around my paunch; we have hit upon a fruitful country, and yet we are not like to get much profit of it!'<sup>1</sup> Thorvald died soon after from this wound. Then the Uniped ran away back toward the north. Karlsefni and his men pursued him, and saw him from time to time<sup>2</sup>. The last they saw of him, he ran down into a creek. Then they turned back; whereupon one of the men recited this ditty:

Eager, our men, up hill down dell,
Hunted a Uniped;
Hearken, Karlsefni, while they tell
How swift the quarry fled!<sup>3</sup>

Then they sailed away back toward the north, and believed they had got sight of the land of the Unipeds; nor were they disposed to risk the lives of their men any longer. They concluded that the mountains of Hóp, and those which they had now found, formed one chain, and this appeared to be so because they were about an equal distance removed from Streamfirth, in either direction<sup>4</sup>. They sailed back, and passed the third winter at Streamfirth. Then the men began to divide into factions<sup>5</sup>, of which the women were the cause; and those who were without wives, endeavoured to seize upon the wives of those who were married, whence the greatest trouble arose. Snorri, Karlsefni's son, was born the first autumn, and he was three winters' old<sup>6</sup> when they took their departure. When they sailed away from Wine-land, they had a southerly wind, and so came upon Markland, where they found five Skrellings, of whom one was bearded, two were women, and two were children. Karlsefni and his people took the boys, but the others escaped, and these Skrellings sank down into the earth. They bore the lads away with them, and taught them to speak, and they were baptized. They said, that their mother's name was Vætildi, and their father's Uvægi<sup>1</sup>. They said, that kings governed the Skrellings<sup>2</sup>, one of whom was called Avalldamon<sup>3</sup>, and the other Valldidida (57). They stated, that there were no houses there, and that the people lived in caves or holes. They said, that there was a land on the other side over against their country, which was inhabited by people who wore white garments, and yelled loudly, and carried poles before them, to which rags were attached<sup>4</sup>; and people believe that this must have been Hvítamanna-land [White-men's-land<sup>5</sup>], or Ireland the Great (58). Now they arrived in Greenland, and remained during the winter with Eric the Red<sup>6</sup>.

Biarni, Grimolf's son, and his companions were driven out into the Atlantic<sup>7</sup>, and came into a sea, which was filled with worms, and their ship began to sink beneath them<sup>8</sup>. They had a boat<sup>9</sup>, which had been coated with seal-tar; this the sea-worm does not penetrate. They took their places in this boat, and then discovered that it would not hold them all<sup>10</sup>. Then said Biarni: 'Since the boat will not hold more than half of our men, it is my advice, that the men who are to go in the boat, be chosen by lot, for this selection must not be made according to rank.' This seemed to them all such a manly offer, that no one opposed it<sup>11</sup>. So they adopted this plan, the men casting lots; and it fell to Biarni to go in the boat, and half<sup>12</sup> of the men with him, for it would not hold more<sup>13</sup>. But when the men were come into the boat, an Icelander<sup>14</sup>, who was in the ship, and who had accompanied Biarni from Iceland, said: 'Dost thou intend, Biarni, to forsake me here?' 'It must be even so,' answers Biarni. 'Not such was the promise thou

<sup>11</sup> EsR: 'Biarni said then, that men should go in the boat, and that this should be determined by casting lots, and not by rank. For all of the men who were there wished to go in the boat; it would not carry all, wherefore they adopted this plan, to choose men by lot for the boat, and from the ship.'

'So be it, it shall not rest thus,' answers Biarni; 'do thou come hither, and I will go to the ship, for I see that thou art eager for life<sup>1</sup>.' Biarni thereupon boarded the ship, and this man entered the boat, and they went their way, until they came to Dublin in Ireland, and there they told this tale; now it is the belief of most people, that Biarni and his companions perished in the maggot-sea, for they were never heard of afterward<sup>2</sup>.

KARLSEFNI AND HIS WIFE THURID'S ISSUE.

The following summer Karlsefni sailed to Iceland and Gudrid<sup>3</sup> with him, and he went home<sup>4</sup> to Reyniness (59). His mother believed that he had made a poor match, and she<sup>5</sup> was not at home the first winter. However, when she became convinced that Gudrid was a very superior woman, she returned to her home, and they lived happily together. Hallfrid was a daughter of Snorri, Karlsefni's son, she was the mother of Bishop Thorlak, Runolf's son (60). They had a son named Thorbiorn, whose daughter's name was Thorunn, [she was] Bishop Biorn's mother. Thorgeir was the name of a son of Snorri, Karlsefni's son, [he was] the father of Ingveld, mother of Bishop Brand the Elder<sup>6</sup>. Steinunn was a daughter of Snorri, Karlsefni's son, who married Einar, a son of Grundar-Ketil, a son of Thorvald Crook<sup>7</sup>, a son of Thori of Espihol. Their son was Thorstein the Unjust<sup>8</sup>, he was the father of Gudrun, who married Jorund of Keldur. Their daughter was Halla, the mother of Flosi, the father of Valgerd, the mother of Herra Erlend the Stout<sup>9</sup>, the father of Herra Hauk the Lawman. Another daughter of Flosi was Thordis, the mother of Fru Ingigerd the Mighty<sup>10</sup>. Her daughter was Fru Hallbera, Abbess of Reyniness at Stad (59). Many other great people in Iceland are descended from Karlsefni and Thurid, who are not mentioned here. God be with us, Amen!

<sup>1</sup> EsR: "Such was not thy promise to me," says he, "when I set out from Iceland with thee, from my father's home." Biarni says: "I see no other course left here, however; but" [answers] "what suggestion hast thou to offer?" He says: "I have to suggest, that we change places, do thou come hither, and I will go thither." Biarni answers: "So be it. I see, indeed, that thou clingest eagerly to life, and holdest it hard to die." So they changed places.'

<sup>2</sup> EsR: 'And men say, that Biarni perished there in the maggot-sea, together with those men, who were there with him in the ship. But the boat, and they who were in it, went their way, until they reached land, and afterwards told this tale.'

CHAPTER III.

THE WINELAND HISTORY OF THE FLATEY BOOK.

THE Flatey Book [Flateyjarbók] is the most extensive and most perfect of Icelandic manuscripts. It is in itself a comprehensive historical library of the era with which it deals, and so considerable are its contents, that they fill upwards of 1700 large octavo pages of printed text<sup>1</sup>. On the title-page of the manuscript<sup>2</sup> we are informed, that it belonged originally to John Haconsson [Jón Hákonarson], for whom it was written by the priests John Thordsson [Jón Þórðarson] and Magnus Thorhallsson [Magnús Þorhallsson]. We have no information concerning the date when the book was commenced by John Thordsson; but the most important portion of the work appears to have been completed in the year 1387<sup>3</sup>, although additions were made to the body of the work by one of the original scribes<sup>4</sup>, and the annals, appended to the book, brought down to the year 1394. Toward the close of the fifteenth century, the then owner of the book, whose name is unknown, inserted three quaternions of additional historical matter in the manuscript<sup>5</sup>, to fill a hiatus in the historical sequence of the work, not, however, in that part of the manuscript which treats of Wineland.

It has been conjectured that the manuscript was written in the north of Iceland<sup>6</sup>,

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Storm, Islandske Annaler, Christiania, 1888, pp. xxxiv-xxxvi. This view, however, conflicts with the opinion held by others that this date should be 1380. Cf. Flateyjarbók, ed. Vigfusson and Unger, Christiania, 1860-68, vol. iii, Fortale, i-iii; Finnur Jónsson, Eddalieder, Halle, o. S., 1888, i. p. viii.

but, according to the editors of the printed text, the facts are that the manuscript was owned in the west of Iceland as far back as we possess any knowledge of it, and there is no positive evidence where it was written<sup>1</sup>. We have, indeed, no further particulars concerning the manuscript before the seventeenth century, when we find that it was in the possession of John Finsson [Jón Finsson], who dwelt in Flatey in Breidafirth [Breiðafjörður], as had his father, and his father's father before him. That the book had been a family heirloom is evident from an entry made in the manuscript by this same John Finsson:

'This book I, John Finsson, own; the gift of my deceased father's father, John Biarnsson<sup>2</sup>, &c.

From John Finsson the book descended to his nephew, John Torfason<sup>3</sup>, from whom that worthy bibliophile, Bishop Bryniolf of Skálholt, sought, in vain, to purchase it, as is related in an anecdote in the bishop's biography:

'Farmer John of Flatey, son of the Rev. Torfi Finsson, owned a large and massive parchment-book in ancient monachal writing, containing sagas of the Kings of Norway, and many others; and it is, therefore, commonly called Flatey Book<sup>4</sup>. This, Bishop Bryniolf endeavoured to purchase, first for money, and then for five hundreds of land. But he, nevertheless, failed to obtain it; however, when John bore him company, as he was leaving the island, he presented him the book; and it is said, that the Bishop rewarded him liberally for it<sup>5</sup>.'

The Flatey Book was among a collection of vellum manuscripts intrusted to the care of Thormod Torfæus, in 1662, as a present from Bishop Bryniolf to King Frederick the Third of Denmark, and thus luckily escaped the fate of others of the bishop's literary treasures. In the Royal Library of Copenhagen it has ever since remained, where it is known as No. 1005, fol. of the Old Royal Collection.

Interpolated in the Saga of Olaf Tryggvason in the Flatey Book are two minor historical narratives. The first of these, in the order in which they appear in the manuscript, is called, a Short Story of Eric the Red [Þáttur Eireks Rauða], the second, a Short Story of the Greenlanders [Grœnlendinga Þáttur]. Although these short histories are not connected in any way in the manuscript, being indeed separated by over fifty columns of extraneous historical matter, they form, if brought together, what may be called, the Flatey Book version of the history of the Wineland discovery, —a version which varies materially from the accounts of the discovery, as they have been preserved elsewhere. Before considering these points of difference, it may be stated that, as we have no certain knowledge where the Flatey Book was written, neither have we any definite information concerning the original material from which the transcripts of these two narratives were made. The original manuscripts of these narratives would appear to have shared a common fate with the other originals from which the scribes of the Flatey Book compiled their work ;—all of this vast congeries of early manuscripts has entirely disappeared. This is the conclusion reached by that eminent authority, the late Dr. Vigfusson<sup>1</sup>, whose profound knowledge of the written literature of the North was supplemented in the present instance by that close acquaintance which he had gained with the Flatey Book, by reason of his having transcribed the entire manuscript for publication<sup>2</sup>.

This total disappearance of all trace of the archetypes of the Flatey Book, although it is by no means the only case of the kind in the history of Icelandic paleography<sup>3</sup>, is especially to be deplored in connection with the Wineland narrative, since it leaves us without a clue, which might aid us in arriving at a solution of certain enigmas which this narrative presents.

In the Flatey Book version of the discovery it is stated that Biarni Heriulfsson, during a voyage from Iceland to Greenland, having been driven to the southward out of his course, came upon unknown lands ; that, following upon this, and as the direct result of Biarni's reports of his discoveries, Leif Ericsson was moved to go in search of the strange lands which Biarni had seen but not explored ; that he found these in due course, 'first that land which Biarni had seen last,' and finally the southernmost land, to which, 'after its products,' he gave the name of Wineland. This account differs entirely from the history contained in the other manuscripts which deal with <sup>1</sup> He says : 'Though I believe I have had in my hands every scrap of the Old Norse or Icelandic vellum writing existing in Scandinavia, I have never been able to identify a scrap of the material they used, nay more, I never remember having found a line in the well-known hand of either John or Magnus, though it is not probable that the Flatey Book was their first or only work, so great has been the destruction of MSS. Again, there would have seemed great likelihood of the Flatey Book being much copied ; it was easy to read, and very complete in its contents. Yet, with one exception, there is no vellum transcript of it, and the great book for some 250 years apparently lay unseen. The one exception is AM. 309 fol., which contains parts of Tryggvasson's Saga, and gives its date thus : "He was then king when the book was written, when there had passed from the Incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ 1387 years, but there be now gone at the time when this book is written 1498 years."' Vigfusson, Pref. Icelandic Sagas, ubi sup. vol. i. p. xxix.

this subject, all of which agree in ascribing the discovery to Leif Ericsson, and unite in the statement that he found Wineland accidentally, during a voyage from Norway to Greenland, which he had undertaken at the instance of King Olaf Tryggvason, for the purpose of introducing Christianity to his fellow-countrymen in Greenland. Not only is Biarni's discovery unknown to any other Icelandic writing now existing, but the man himself, as well as his daring voyage, have failed to find a chronicler elsewhere, although his father was 'a most distinguished man,' the grandson of a 'settler,' and a kinsman of the first Icelandic colonist.

The first portion of the Flatey Book version, the 'Short Story of Eric the Red,' concludes with the words, 'Biarni now went to his father, gave up his voyaging, and remained with his father during Heriulf's lifetime, and continued to dwell there after his father.' The second portion of this version of the Wineland history, the 'Short Story of the Greenlanders,' begins with the words, 'It is now next to this, that Biarni Heriulfsson came out from Greenland on a visit to Earl Eric,' &c. As has already been stated, the two portions of the history of the Wineland discovery, as they appear in the Flatey Book, are not in any way connected with each other. The first narrative occupies its appropriate place in the account of the life of King Olaf Tryggvason, as do the other narratives, similar in character, which are introduced into this as into the other sagas in the manuscript, and there appears to be no reason why the second narrative, 'A Short Story of the Greenlanders,' should be regarded as having received treatment different, in this respect, from other interpolated narratives of the same class. If, therefore, we interpret the opening words of this story of the Greenlanders, 'It is now next to this,' to mean that the incident which follows is related next in chronological order after that part of the saga which has immediately preceded it, it becomes apparent that Biarni's visit must have taken place after the battle of Svoldr, in which King Olaf Tryggvason fell, and Earl Eric was victorious<sup>1</sup>. This battle took place on the 9th of September, in the year 1000. As it is not probable that Biarni would have undertaken his voyage to Norway before the summer following, the earliest date which could reasonably be assigned for Biarni's sojourn at the Earl's court would appear to be the winter of the years 1001-1002<sup>2</sup>. We are told in the same place that Biarni returned to Greenland the following summer, and that subsequent to his return Leif purchased his ship, and went in search of the land which Biarni had seen, but had failed to explore, in the year 985, according to the chronology of the 'Short Story.'

<sup>1</sup> Schöning, who adopted the narrative of the Flatey Book in his edition of Heimskringla, assigns the date of Biarni's visit to the Earl to the year 988 or 989. With him, in this view, the editors of Grönlands historiske Mindesmærker seem inclined to agree, but the Flatey Book itself does not appear to furnish any support for this conjecture. Cf. Grönlands historiske Mindesmærker, Copenh. 1838, vol. i. pp. 266-7.

Leif's voyage of exploration, as described in the Flatey Book, could, therefore, scarcely have taken place before the year 1002<sup>1</sup>. But, according to the other historical data already cited, Leif discovered Wineland during a voyage to Greenland, undertaken at the request, and during the lifetime, of King Olaf Tryggvason, hence obviously not later than the year 1000. The Flatey Book refers to this voyage in the following words: 'That same summer he [King Olaf Tryggvason] sent Gizur and Hialti to Iceland, as has already been written. At that time King Olaf sent Leif to Greenland to preach Christianity there. The King sent with him a priest and certain other holy men to baptize the folk, and teach them the true faith. Leif went to Greenland that summer and took [on board his vessel] a ship's-crew of men, who were at the time in great peril upon a wreck. He arrived in Greenland late in the summer, and went home to his father, Eric, at Brattahlid. The people afterwards called him Leif the Lucky, but his father, Eric, said that Leif's having rescued the crew and restored the men to life, might be balanced against the fact that he had brought the impostor to Greenland, so he called the priest. Nevertheless, through Leif's advice and persuasion, Eric was baptized, and all of the people of Greenland<sup>2</sup>.'

It will be observed, that, in this record of Leif's missionary voyage, no allusion is made to the discovery of Wineland, as in the other accounts of the same voyage, with which, in other respects, this passage agrees. By this variation a conflict with Biarni's claim to the priority of discovery, previously promulgated in the 'Short Story of Eric the Red,' is avoided. A portion of this passage may not, however, be so happily reconciled. It is said that, through Leif's advice and persuasion, Eric the Red was baptized, while we find in the 'Short Story of the Greenlanders,' the statement, that 'Eric the Red died before Christianity.' Moreover we have, in the 'Short Story of the Greenlanders,' in addition to this direct conflict of statement, an apparent repetition of the incident of the rescue of the shipwrecked mariners, when we are told that Leif effected a rescue of castaways on his return from a voyage of exploration to Wineland, and was therefore called Leif the Lucky. If this be not a repetition of the same incident, then we must conclude that Leif upon two different voyages saved the lives of a crew of ship-wrecked mariners, for which he twice received the same title from the same people! In the description of the rescue, contained in the 'Short Story of the Greenlanders,' we read that the leader of the castaways was one Thori Easterling [Þórir austmaðr], whose wife, Gudrid, Thorbiorn's daughter [Guðriðr Þorbjarnardóttir], seems to have been among the rescued. This Thori is mentioned nowhere save in the Flatey Book. His wife was so famous a personage in Icelandic annals that it seems passing strange this spouse should have been so completely ignored by other Icelandic chronicles, which have not failed to record Gudrid's marriage to Thorstein Ericsson, and subsequently to Thorfinn Karlsefni. Indeed, according to the biography of this 'most noble lady,' as written in the Saga of Eric the Red, there is no place for Thori, for Gudrid is said to have come to Greenland in much less romantic fashion, namely, as an unmarried woman, in the same ship with, and under the protection of her father, Thorbiorn.

Another chronological error occurs in that paragraph of the 'Short Story of Eric the Red,' wherein it is stated that, 'after sixteen winters had lapsed from the time when Eric the Red went to colonize Greenland, Leif, Eric's son, sailed out from Greenland to Norway. He arrived in Drontheim in the autumn when King Olaf Tryggvason was come down from the North out of Halogaland.' It has previously been stated in this same chronicle that Eric set out to colonize Greenland fifteen years before Christianity was legally adopted in Iceland, that is to say in the year 985. Whence it follows, from this chronology, that Leif's voyage must have been undertaken in the year 1001, but since Olaf Tryggvason was killed in the autumn of the year 1000, this is, from the context, manifestly impossible. If we may suppose that the scribe of the Flatey Book, by a careless verbal substitution, wrote 'fór at byggja' [went to colonize], instead of 'fór at leita' [went in search of], the chronology of the narrative becomes reconcilable.

In the 'Short Story of the Greenlanders' inaccuracies of lesser import occur, one of which, at least, appears to owe its origin to a clerical blunder. In the narrative of Freydis' voyage, we are told, that she waited upon the brothers Helgi and Finnbogí, and persuaded them to join her in an expedition to Wineland; according to the text, however, she enters into an agreement governing the manning of their ships, not with them, but with Karlsefni. Yet it is obvious, from the context, that Karlsefni did not participate in the enterprise, nor does it appear that he had any interest whatsoever in the undertaking. The substitution of Karlsefni's name for that of Helgi or Finnbogí, by a careless scribe, may have given rise to this lack of sequence. A blunder, which has crept into the genealogical list, at the conclusion of the history, may, perhaps, owe its origin to a somewhat similar cause. In this list, it will be noted, Bishop Thorlak [Þorlákr] is called the grandson of Hallfrid [Hallfríðr], Snorri's daughter; in the words of the manuscript, 'Hallfrid was the name of the daughter of Snorri, Karlsefni's son; she was the mother of Runolf [Runólfr], the father of Bishop Thorlak.' Now Runolf was, indeed, the father of Bishop Thorlak, but he was the husband and not the son of Hallfrid. If we may suppose the heedless insertion of the word 'mother' in the place of 'wife,' the palpable error, as the text now stands, would be removed.

It has been conjectured that the Wineland History of the Flatey Book has been drawn from a more primitive source than the narrative of the discovery which has been preserved in the two manuscripts, Hauk's Book and AM. 557, 4to<sup>1</sup>. Two passages in the Flatey Book narrative lend a certain measure of plausibility to this conjecture. In the 'Short Story of Eric the Red' it is stated, that Eric called his land-fall in Greenland, Midiokul [Miðjökull], in the words of the history; 'this is now called Blacksark [Bláserkr].' In Hauk's Book this mountain is also called Blacksark; in AM. 557, 4to, it is called Whitesark [Hvítserkr]; neither of these manuscripts, however, recalls the earlier name. Again, in the list of the descendants of Snorri, Karlsefni's Wineland-born son, appended to the 'Short Story of the Greenlanders,' Bishop Brand is so called without qualification, while in both texts of the Saga of Eric the Red he is referred to as Bishop Brand the Elder [hin fyrri]. The second Bishop Brand was ordained in 1263<sup>2</sup>. This fact, while it would, without the other evidence which we possess, establish a date prior to which neither Hauk's Book nor AM. 557, 4to, could have been written, seems, at the same time, to afford negative evidence in support of the claim for the riper antiquity of the source from which the Flatey Book narrative was drawn. However this may be, the lapses already noted, together with the introduction of such incidents as that of the apparition of the big-eyed Gudrid to her namesake, Karlsefni's spouse; the narrative of Freydis' unpalliated treachery; the account of Wineland grapes which produced intoxication, and which apparently ripened at all seasons of the year, of honey-dew grass, and the like, all seem to point either to a deliberate or careless corruption of the primitive history. Nevertheless, despite the discrepancies existing between the account of the Wineland discovery, as it has been preserved in the Flatey Book and as it is given elsewhere, so striking a parallelism is apparent in these different versions of this history, in the chief points of historical interest, as to point conclusively to their common origin.

The two disjoined 'accounts' of the Flatey Book, which relate to the Wineland discovery, are brought together in the translation which follows.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF ERIC THE RED<sup>1</sup>.

There was a man named Thorvald, a son of Osvald, Ulf's son, Eyxna-Thori's son. Thorvald and Eric the Red, his son, left Jaederen [in Norway], on account of manslaughter, and went to Iceland. At that time Iceland was extensively colonized. They first lived at Drangar on Horn-strands, and there Thorvald died. Eric then married Thorhild, the daughter of Jorund and Thorbiorg the Ship-chested<sup>2</sup>, who was then married to Thorbiorn of the Haukadal family. Eric then removed from the north, and made his home at Ericsstadir by Vatnshorn. Eric and Thorhild's son was called Leif.

After the killing of Eyiulf the Foul<sup>3</sup>, and Duelling-Hrafn, Eric was banished from Haukadal, and betook himself westward to Breidafirth, settling in Eyxney at Ericsstadir. He loaned his outer da's-boards to Thorgest, and could not get these again when he demanded them. This gave rise to broils and battles between himself and Thorgest, as Eric's Saga relates<sup>4</sup>. Eric was backed in the dispute by Styr Thorgrimsson, Eyiulf of Sviney, the sons of Brand of Alptafirth and Thorbiorn Vifilsson, while the Thorgesters were upheld by the sons of Thord the Yeller<sup>5</sup> and Thorgeir of Hitardal. Eric was declared an outlaw at Thorsness-thing. He thereupon equipped his ship for a voyage, in Ericsvag, and when he was ready to sail, Styr and the others<sup>6</sup> accompanied him out beyond the islands. Eric told them, that it was his purpose to go in search of that country which Gunnbiorn, son of Ulf the Crow<sup>7</sup>, had seen, when he was driven westward across the main, at the time when he discovered Gunnbiorns-skerries; he added, that he would return to his friends, if he should succeed in finding this country. Eric sailed out from Snaefellsiokul, and found the land. He gave the name of Midiokul to his landfall<sup>8</sup>; this is now called Blacksark. From thence he proceeded southward along the coast, in search of habitable land. He passed the first winter at Ericsey, near the middle of the Eastern-settlement, and the following spring he went to Ericsfirth, where he selected a dwelling-place. In the summer he visited the western uninhabited country, and assigned names to many of the localities. The second winter he remained at Holmar by Hrafnsgnipa<sup>9</sup>, and the third summer he sailed northward to Snæfell, and all the way into Hrafnfirth; then he said he had reached the head of Ericsfirth. He then returned and passed the third winter in Ericsey at the mouth of Ericsfirth. The next summer he sailed to Iceland, landing in Breidafirth. He called the country, which he had discovered, Greenland, because, he said, people would be attracted thither, if the country had a good name. Eric spent the winter in Iceland, and the following summer set out to colonize the country. He settled at Brattahlid in Ericsfirth, and learned men say, that in this same summer, in which Eric set out to settle Greenland, thirty-five<sup>1</sup> ships sailed out of Breidafirth and Borgarfirth; fourteen of these arrived there safely, some were driven back and some were lost. This was fifteen years before Christianity was legally adopted in Iceland<sup>2</sup>. During the same summer Bishop Frederick and Thorvald Kodransson (61) went abroad [from Iceland]. Of those men, who accompanied Eric to Greenland, the following took possession of land there: Heriulf, Heriulfsfirth, he dwelt at Heriulfsness; Ketil, Ketilsfirth; Hrafn, Hrafnfirth; Solvi, Solvadal; Helgi Thorbrandsson, Alptafirth; Thorbiorn Gleamer<sup>3</sup>, Siglufirth; Einar, Einarsfirth; Hafgrim, Hafgrimsfirth and Vatnahverfi; Arnlaug, Arnlaugsfirth; while some went to the Western-settlement.

LEIF THE LUCKY BAPTIZED<sup>4</sup>.

After that sixteen winters had lapsed, from the time when Eric the Red went to colonize Greenland, Leif, Eric's son, sailed out from Greenland to Norway. He arrived in Drontheim<sup>5</sup> in the autumn, when King Olaf Tryggvason was come down from the north, out of Halagoland. Leif put in to Nidaros with his ship, and set out at once to visit the king. King Olaf expounded the faith to him, as he did to other heathen men who came to visit him. It proved easy for the king to persuade Leif, and he was accordingly baptized, together with all of his shipmates. Leif remained throughout the winter with the king, by whom he was well entertained.

BIARNI GOES IN QUEST OF<sup>6</sup> GREENLAND.

Heriulf (62) was a son of Bard Heriulfsson. He was a kinsman of Ingolf, the first colonist. Ingolf allotted land to Heriulf<sup>7</sup> between Vág and Reykianess, and he dwelt at first at Drepstokk. Heriulf's wife's name was Thorgerd, and their son, whose name was Biarni, was a most promising man. He formed an inclination for voyaging<sup>1</sup> while he was still young, and he prospered both in property and public esteem. It was his custom to pass his winters alternately abroad and with his father. Biarni soon became the owner of a trading-ship, and during the last winter that he spent in Norway, [his father], Heriulf determined to accompany Eric on his voyage to Greenland, and made his preparations to give up his farm<sup>2</sup>. Upon the ship with Heriulf was a Christian man from the Hebrides<sup>3</sup>, he it was who composed the Sea-Rollers' Song (63), which contains this stave:

Mine adventure to the Meek One,
 Monk-heart-searcher<sup>4</sup>, I commit now<sup>5</sup>;
 He, who heaven's halls doth govern<sup>6</sup>,
 Hold the hawk's-seat<sup>7</sup> ever o'er me!

Heriulf settled at Heriulfsness, and was a most distinguished man. Eric the Red dwelt at Brattahlid, where he was held in the highest esteem, and all men paid him homage<sup>8</sup>. These were Eric's children: Leif, Thorvald, and Thorstein, and a daughter whose name was Freydis; she was wedded to a man named Thorvard, and they dwelt at Gardar, where the episcopal seat now is. She was a very haughty woman, while Thorvard was a man of little force of character, and Freydis had been wedded to him chiefly because of his wealth<sup>9</sup>. At that time the people of Greenland were heathen.

Biarni arrived with his ship at Eyraar [in Iceland] in the summer of the same year, in the spring of which his father had sailed away. Biarni was much surprised when he heard this news<sup>1</sup>, and would not discharge his cargo. His shipmates enquired of him what he intended to do, and he replied that it was his purpose to keep to his custom, and make his home for the winter with his father<sup>2</sup>; 'and I will take the ship to Greenland, if you will bear me company.' They all replied that they would abide by his decision. Then said Biarni, 'Our voyage must be regarded as foolhardy, seeing that no one of us has ever been in the Greenland Sea<sup>3</sup>.' Nevertheless they put out to sea when they were equipped for the voyage, and sailed for three days, until the land was hidden by the water, and then the fair wind died out, and north winds arose, and fogs, and they knew not whither they were drifting, and thus it lasted for many 'dœgr.' Then they saw the sun again, and were able to determine the quarters of the heavens<sup>4</sup>; they hoisted sail, and sailed that 'dœgr' through before they saw land. They discussed among themselves what land it could be, and Biarni said that he did not believe that it could be Greenland. They asked whether he wished to sail to this land or not. 'It is my counsel' [said he], 'to sail close to the land.' They did so, and soon saw that the land was level, and covered with woods<sup>5</sup>, and that there were small hillocks upon it. They left the land on their larboard, and let the sheet turn toward the land. They sailed for two 'dœgr' before they saw another land. They asked whether Biarni thought this was Greenland yet. He replied that he did not think this any more like Greenland than the former, 'because in Greenland there are said to be many great ice-mountains.' They soon approached this land, and saw that it was a flat and wooded country. The fair wind failed them then, and the crew took counsel together, and concluded that it would be wise to land there, but Biarni would not consent to this. They alleged that they were in need of both wood and water. 'Ye have no lack of either of these,' says Biarni—a course, forsooth, which won him blame among his shipmates. He bade them hoist sail, which they did, and turning the prow from the land they sailed out upon the high seas, with south-westerly gales, for three 'dœgr,' when they saw the third land; this land was high and mountainous, with ice-mountains upon it (64). They asked Biarni then whether he would land there, and he replied that he was not disposed to do so, 'because this land does not appear to me to offer any attractions<sup>6</sup>.' Nor did they lower their sail, but held their course off the land, and saw that it was an island. They left this land astern<sup>1</sup>, and held out to sea with the same fair wind. The wind waxed amain, and Biarni directed them to reef, and not to sail at a speed unbefitting their ship and rigging. They sailed now for four 'dægr,' when they saw the fourth land. Again they asked Biarni whether he thought this could be Greenland or not. Biarni answers, 'This is likest Greenland, according to that which has been reported to me concerning it, and here we will steer to the land.' They directed their course thither, and landed in the evening, below a cape upon which there was a boat, and there, upon this cape, dwelt Heriulf (65), Biarni's father, whence the cape took its name, and was afterwards called Heriulfsness. Biarni now went to his father, gave up his voyaging, and remained with his father while Heriulf lived, and continued to live there after his father.

HERE BEGINS THE BRIEF HISTORY OF THE GREENLANDERS<sup>2</sup>.

Next to this is now to be told how Biarni Heriulfsson came out from Greenland on a visit to Earl Eric, by whom he was well received. Biarni gave an account of his travels [upon the occasion] when he saw the lands, and the people thought that he had been lacking in enterprise<sup>3</sup>, since he had no report to give concerning these countries, and the fact brought him reproach. Biarni was appointed one of the Earl's men, and went out to Greenland the following summer. There was now much talk about voyages of discovery. Leif, the son of Eric the Red, of Brattahlid, visited Biarni Heriulfsson and bought a ship of him, and collected a crew, until they formed altogether a company of thirty-five men<sup>4</sup>. Leif invited his father, Eric, to become the leader of the expedition, but Eric declined, saying that he was then stricken in years, and adding that he was less able to endure the exposure of sea-life than he had been. Leif replied that he would nevertheless be the one who would be most apt to bring good luck<sup>5</sup>, and Eric yielded to Leif's solicitation, and rode from home when they were ready to sail. When he was but a short distance from the ship, the horse which Eric was riding stumbled, and he was thrown from his back and wounded his foot, whereupon he exclaimed, 'It is not designed for me to discover more lands than the one in which we are now living, nor can we now continue longer together.' Eric returned home to Brattahlid, and Leif pursued his way to the ship with his companions, thirty-five men; one of the company was a German<sup>1</sup> named Tyrker. They put the ship in order, and when they were ready, they sailed out to sea, and found first that land which Biarni and his ship-mates<sup>2</sup> found last. They sailed up to the land and cast anchor, and launched a boat and went ashore, and saw no grass there; great ice mountains lay inland back from the sea<sup>3</sup>, and it was as a [table-land of] flat rock all the way from the sea to the ice mountains, and the country seemed to them to be entirely devoid of good qualities. Then said Leif, 'It has not come to pass with us in regard to this land as with Biarni, that we have not gone upon it. To this country I will now give a name, and call it Helluland<sup>4</sup>'. They returned to the ship, put out to sea, and found a second land. They sailed again to the land, and came to anchor, and launched the boat, and went ashore. This was a level wooded land, and there were broad stretches of white sand, where they went, and the land was level by the sea<sup>5</sup>. Then said Leif, 'This land shall have a name after its nature, and we will call it Markland<sup>6</sup>.' They returned to the ship forthwith, and sailed away upon the main with north-east winds, and were out two 'dægr' before they sighted land. They sailed toward this land, and came to an island which lay to the northward off the land. There they went ashore and looked about them, the weather being fine, and they observed that there was dew upon the grass, and it so happened that they touched the dew with their hands, and touched their hands to their mouths, and it seemed to them that they had never before tasted anything so sweet as this. They went aboard their ship again and sailed into a certain sound, which lay between the island and a cape, which jutted out from the land on the north, and they stood in westering past the cape. At ebb-tide there were broad reaches of shallow water there, and they ran their ship aground there, and it was a long distance from the ship to the ocean<sup>7</sup>; yet were they so anxious to go ashore that they could not wait until the tide should rise under their ship, but hastened to the land, where a certain river flows out from a lake. As soon as the tide rose beneath their ship, however, they took the boat and rowed to the ship, which they conveyed up the river, and so into the lake, where they cast anchor and carried their hammocks ashore from the ship, and built themselves booths there. They afterwards determined to establish themselves there for the winter, and they accordingly built a large house. There was no lack of salmon there either in the river or in the lake, and larger salmon than they had ever seen before. The country thereabouts seemed to be possessed of such good qualities that cattle would need no fodder there during the winters. There was no frost there in the winters<sup>1</sup>, and the grass withered but little. The days and nights there were of more nearly equal length than in Greenland or Iceland. On the shortest day of winter the sun was up between 'eyktarstad' and 'dagmalastad (66)<sup>2</sup>.' When they had completed their house Leif said to his companions, 'I propose now to divide our company into two groups, and to set about an exploration of the country; one half of our party shall remain at home at the house, while the other half shall investigate the land, and they must not go beyond a point from which they can return home the same evening, and are not to separate [from each other].' Thus they did for a time; Leif himself, by turns, joined the exploring party or remained behind at the house. Leif was a large and powerful man, and of a most imposing bearing, a man of sagacity, and a very just man in all things.

LEIF THE LUCKY FINDS<sup>3</sup> MEN UPON A SKERRY AT SEA.

It was discovered<sup>4</sup> one evening that one of their company was missing, and this proved to be Tyrker, the German. Leif was sorely troubled by this, for Tyrker had lived with Leif and his father<sup>5</sup> for a long time, and had been very devoted to Leif, when he was a child. Leif severely reprimanded his companions, and prepared to go in search of him, taking twelve men with him. They had proceeded but a short distance from the house, when they were met by Tyrker, whom they received most cordially. Leif observed at once that his foster-father was in lively spirits. Tyrker had a prominent forehead, restless eyes, small features<sup>6</sup>, was diminutive in stature, and rather a sorry-looking individual withal, but was, nevertheless, a most capable handicraftsman. Leif addressed him, and asked: 'Wherefore art thou so belated, foster-father mine, and astray from the others?' In the beginning Tyrker spoke for some time in German, rolling his eyes, and grinning, and they could not understand him; but after a time he addressed them in the Northern tongue: 'I did not go much further [than you], and yet<sup>1</sup> I have something of novelty to relate. I have found vines and grapes.' 'Is this indeed true, foster-father?' said Leif. 'Of a certainty it is true,' quoth he, 'for I was born where there is no lack of either grapes or vines.' They slept the night through, and on the morrow Leif said to his shipmates: 'We will now divide our labours<sup>2</sup>, and each day will either gather grapes or cut vines and fell trees, so as to obtain a cargo of these for my ship.' They acted upon this advice, and it is said, that their after-boat was filled with grapes. A cargo sufficient for the ship was cut, and when the spring came, they made their ship ready, and sailed away; and from its products Leif gave the land a name, and called it Wineland. They sailed out to sea, and had fair winds until they sighted Greenland, and the fells below the glaciers; then one of the men spoke up, and said, 'Why do you steer the ship so much into the wind?' Leif answers: 'I have my mind upon my steering, but on other matters as well. Do ye not see anything out of the common<sup>3</sup>?' They replied, that they saw nothing strange<sup>4</sup>. 'I do not know,' says Leif, 'whether it is a ship or a skerry that I see.' Now they saw it, and said, that it must be a skerry; but he was so much keener of sight than they, that he was able to discern men upon the skerry. 'I think it best to tack,' says Leif, 'so that we may draw near to them, that we may be able to render them assistance, if they should stand in need of it; and if they should not be peaceably disposed, we shall still have better command of the situation than they<sup>5</sup>.' They approached the skerry, and lowering their sail, cast anchor, and launched a second small boat, which they had brought with them. Tyrker inquired who was the leader of the party. He replied that his name was Thori, and that he was a Norseman; 'but what is thy name?' Leif gave his name. 'Art thou a son of Eric the Red of Brattahlid?' says he. Leif responded that he was. 'It is now my wish,' says Leif, 'to take you all into my ship, and likewise so much of your possessions as the ship will hold.' This offer was accepted, and [with their ship] thus laden, they held away to Ericsfirth, and sailed until they arrived at Brattahlid. Having discharged the cargo, Leif invited Thori, with his wife, Gudrid, and three others, to make their home with him, and procured quarters for the other members of the crew, both for his own and Thori's men. Leif rescued fifteen persons from the skerry. He was afterward called Leif the Lucky. Leif had now goodly store both of property and honour. There was serious illness that winter in Thori's party, and Thori and a great number of his people died. Eric the Red also died that winter. There was now much talk about Leif's Wineland journey, and his brother, Thorvald, held that the country had not been sufficiently explored. Thereupon Leif said to Thorvald: 'If it be thy will, brother, thou mayest go to Wineland with my ship, but I wish the ship first to fetch the wood, which Thori had upon the skerry.' And so it was done.

Now Thorvald, with the advice of his brother, Leif, prepared to make this voyage with thirty men. They put their ship in order, and sailed out to sea; and there is no account of their voyage before their arrival at Leif's-booths in Wineland. They laid up their ship there, and remained there quietly during the winter, supplying themselves with food by fishing. In the spring, however, Thorvald said that they should put their ship in order, and that a few men should take the after-boat, and proceed along the western coast, and explore [the region] thereabouts during the summer. They found it a fair, well-wooded country; it was but a short distance from the woods to the sea, and [there were] white sands, as well as great numbers of islands and shallows. They found neither dwelling of man nor lair of beast; but in one of the westerly islands, they found a wooden building for the shelter of grain (67). They found no other trace of human handiwork, and they turned back, and arrived at Leifs-booths in the autumn. The following summer Thorvald set out toward the east with the ship<sup>2</sup>, and along the northern coast. They were met by a high wind off a certain promontory, and were driven ashore there, and damaged the keel of their ship, and were compelled to remain there for a long time and repair the injury to their vessel. Then said Thorvald to his companions: 'I propose that we raise the keel upon this cape, and call it Keelness<sup>3</sup>,' and so they did. Then they sailed away, to the eastward off the land, and into the mouth of the adjoining firth, and to a headland, which projected into the sea there, and which was entirely covered with woods. They found an anchorage for their ship, and put out the gangway to the land, and Thorvald and all of his companions went ashore. 'It is a fair region here,' said he, 'and here I should like to make my home.' They then returned to the ship, and discovered on the sands, in beyond the headland, three mounds; they went up to these, and saw that they were three skin-canoes, with three men under each. They, thereupon divided their party, and succeeded in seizing all of the men but one, who escaped with his canoe. They killed the eight men, and then ascended the headland again, and looked about them, and discovered within the firth certain hillocks, which they concluded must be habitations. They were then so overpowered with sleep<sup>1</sup> that they could not keep awake, and all fell into a [heavy] slumber, from which they were awakened by the sound of a cry uttered above them<sup>2</sup>; and the words of the cry were these: 'Awake, Thorvald, thou and all thy company, if thou wouldst save thy life; and board thy ship with all thy men, and sail with all speed from the land!' A countless number of skin-canoes then advanced toward them from the inner part of the firth, whereupon Thorvald exclaimed: 'We must put out the war-boards (68), on both sides of the ship, and defend ourselves to the best of our ability, but offer little attack.' This they did, and the Skrellings, after they had shot at them for a time, fled precipitately, each as best he could. Thorvald then inquired of his men, whether any of them had been wounded, and they informed him that no one of them had received a wound. 'I have been wounded in my arm-pit<sup>3</sup>,' says he; 'an arrow flew in between the gunwale and the shield, below my arm. Here is the shaft, and it will bring me to my end<sup>4</sup>!' I counsel you now to retrace your way with the utmost speed. But me ye shall convey to that headland which seemed to me to offer so pleasant a dwelling-place; thus it may be fulfilled, that the truth sprang to my lips, when I expressed the wish to abide there for a time<sup>5</sup>. Ye shall bury me there, and place a cross at my head, and another at my feet, and call it Crossness<sup>6</sup> for ever after.' At that time Christianity had obtained in Greenland; Eric the Red died, however, before [the introduction of] Christianity.

Thorvald died, and when they had carried out his injunctions, they took their departure, and rejoined their companions, and they told each other of the experiences which had befallen them<sup>7</sup>. They remained there during the winter, and gathered grapes and wood with which to freight the ship. In the following spring they returned to Greenland, and arrived with their ship in Ericsfirth, where they were able to recount great tidings to Leif.

In the meantime it had come to pass in Greenland, that Thorstein of Ericsfirth had married, and taken to wife Gudrid, Thorbiorn's daughter, [she] who had been the spouse of Thori Eastman (69), as has been already related. Now Thorstein Ericsson, being minded to make the voyage<sup>2</sup> to Wineland after the body of his brother, Thorvald, equipped the same ship, and selected a crew of twenty-five men<sup>3</sup> of good size and strength<sup>4</sup>, and taking with him his wife, Gudrid, when all was in readiness, they sailed out into the open ocean, and out of sight of land. They were driven hither and thither over the sea all that summer, and lost all reckoning<sup>5</sup>, and at the end of the first week of winter they made the land at Lysufirth in Greenland, in the Western-settlement. Thorstein set out in search of quarters for his crew, and succeeded in procuring homes for all of his shipmates; but he and his wife were unprovided for, and remained together upon the ship for two or more days<sup>6</sup>. At this time Christianity was still in its infancy in Greenland. It befell, early one morning, that men came to their tent, and the leader inquired who the people were within the tent. Thorstein replies: 'We are twain,' says he; 'but who is it who asks?' 'My name is Thorstein, and I am known as Thorstein the Swarthy<sup>7</sup>, and my errand hither is to offer you two, husband and wife, a home with me.' Thorstein replied, that he would consult with his wife, and she bidding him decide, he accepted the invitation. 'I will come after you on the morrow with a sumpter-horse, for I am not lacking in means wherewith to provide for you both, although it will be lonely living with me, since there are but two of us, my wife and myself, for I, forsooth, am a very hard man to get on with<sup>8</sup>; moreover, my faith is not the same as yours<sup>9</sup>, albeit methinks that is the better to which you hold.' He returned for them on the morrow, with the beast, and they took up their home with Thorstein the Swarthy, and were well treated by him. Gudrid was a woman of fine presence, and a clever woman, and very happy in adapting herself to strangers.

Early in the winter Thorstein Ericsson's party was visited by sickness, and many of his companions died. He caused coffins to be made for the bodies of the dead, and had them conveyed to the ship, and bestowed there; 'for it is my purpose to have all the bodies taken to Ericsfirth in the summer.' It was not long before illness appeared in Thorstein's home, and his wife, whose name was Grimhild, was first taken sick. She was a very vigorous woman, and as strong as a man, but the sickness mastered her; and soon thereafter Thorstein Ericsson was seized with the illness, and they both lay ill at the same time; and Grimhild, Thorstein the Swarthy's wife, died, and when she was dead Thorstein went out of the room to procure a deal, upon which to lay the corpse. Thereupon Gudrid spoke. 'Do not be absent long, Thorstein mine!' says she. He replied, that so it should be. Thorstein Ericsson then exclaimed: 'Our house-wife is acting now in a marvellous fashion, for she is raising herself up on her elbow, and stretching out her feet from the side of the bed, and groping after her shoes.' At that moment Thorstein, the master of the house<sup>1</sup>, entered, and Grimhild laid herself down, wherewithal every timber in the room creaked. Thorstein now fashioned a coffin for Grimhild's body, and bore it away, and cared for it. He was a big man, and strong, but it called for all [his strength], to enable him to remove the corpse from the house. The illness grew upon Thorstein Ericsson, and he died, whereat his wife, Gudrid, was sorely grieved. They were all in the room at the time, and Gudrid was seated upon a chair before the bench, upon which her husband, Thorstein, was lying. Thorstein, the master of the house<sup>1</sup>, then taking Gudrid in his arms, [carried her] from the chair, and seated himself, with her, upon another bench, over against her husband's body, and exerted himself in divers ways to console her, and endeavoured to reassure her, and promised her that he would accompany her to Ericsfirth with the body of her husband, Thorstein, and those of his companions: 'I will likewise summon other persons hither,' says he, 'to attend upon thee, and entertain thee.' She thanked him. Then Thorstein Ericsson sat up, and exclaimed: 'Where is Gudrid?' Thrice he repeated the question, but Gudrid made no response. She then asked Thorstein, the master, 'Shall I give answer to his question, or not?' Thorstein, the master, bade her make no reply, and he then crossed the floor, and seated himself upon the chair, with Gudrid in his lap, and spoke, saying: 'What dost thou wish, namesake?' After a little while, Thorstein replies: 'I desire to tell Gudrid of the fate which is in store for her<sup>2</sup>, to the end that she may be better reconciled to my death, for I am indeed come to a goodly resting-place<sup>3</sup>. This I have to tell thee, Gudrid, that thou art to marry an Icelander, and that ye are to have a long wedded life together, and a numerous and noble progeny, illustrious, and famous, of good odour and sweet virtues. Ye shall go from Greenland to Norway, and thence to Iceland, where ye shall build your home. There ye shall dwell together for a long time, but thou shalt outlive him, and shalt then go abroad and to the South<sup>1</sup>, and shalt return to Iceland again, to thy home, and there a church shall then be raised, and thou shalt abide there and take the veil, and there thou shalt die.' When he had thus spoken, Thorstein sank back again, and his body was laid out for burial, and borne to the ship. Thorstein, the master, faithfully performed all his promises to Gudrid. He sold his lands and live-stock in the spring, and accompanied Gudrid to the ship, with all his possessions. He put the ship in order, procured a crew, and then sailed to Ericsfirth. The bodies of the dead were now buried at the church, and Gudrid then went home to Leif at Brattahlid, while Thorstein the Swarthy made a home for himself on Ericsfirth, and remained there as long as he lived, and was looked upon as a very superior man.

OF THE WINELAND VOYAGES OF THORFINN AND HIS COMPANIONS.

That same summer a ship came from Norway to Greenland. The skipper's name was Thorfinn Karlsefni<sup>2</sup>; he was a son of Thord Horsehead<sup>3</sup>, and a grandson of Snorri, the son of Thord of Höfði. Thorfinn Karlsefni, who was a very wealthy man, passed the winter at Brattahlid with Leif Ericsson. He very soon set his heart upon Gudrid, and sought her hand in marriage; she referred him to Leif for her answer, and was subsequently betrothed to him, and their marriage was celebrated that same winter. A renewed discussion arose concerning a Wineland voyage, and the folk urged Karlsefni to make the venture, Gudrid joining with the others<sup>4</sup>. He determined to undertake the voyage, and assembled a company of sixty men and five women, and entered into an agreement with his shipmates that they should each share equally in all the spoils of the enterprise<sup>5</sup>. They took with them all kinds of cattle, as it was their intention to settle the country, if they could. Karlsefni asked Leif for the house in Wineland, and he replied, that he would lend it but not give it. They sailed out to sea with the ship, and arrived safe and sound at Leifs-booths, and carried their hammocks ashore there. They were soon provided with an abundant and goodly supply of food, for a whale of good size and quality was driven ashore there, and they secured it, and flensed it, and had then no lack of provisions. The cattle were turned out upon the land<sup>1</sup>, and the males soon became very restless and vicious; they had brought a bull with them. Karlsefni caused trees to be felled, and to be hewed into timbers, wherewith to load his ship, and the wood was placed upon a cliff to dry. They gathered somewhat of all of the valuable products of the land, grapes, and all kinds of game and fish, and other good things. In the summer succeeding the first winter, Skrellings were discovered<sup>2</sup>. A great troop of men came forth from out the woods. The cattle were hard by, and the bull began to bellow and roar with a great noise, wherewith the Skrellings were frightened, and ran away, with their packs wherein were grey furs, sables, and all kinds of peltries. They fled towards Karlsefni's dwelling, and sought to effect an entrance into the house, but Karlsefni caused the doors to be defended [against them]. Neither [people] could understand the other's language. The Skrellings put down their bundles then, and loosed them, and offered their wares [for barter], and were especially anxious to exchange these for weapons, but Karlsefni forbade his men to sell their weapons, and taking counsel with himself, he bade the women carry out milk<sup>3</sup> to the Skrellings, which they no sooner saw, than they wanted to buy it, and nothing else. Now the outcome of the Skrellings' trading was, that they carried their wares away in their stomachs, while they left their packs and peltries behind with Karlsefni and his companions, and having accomplished this [exchange] they went away. Now it is to be told, that Karlsefni caused a strong wooden palisade to be constructed and set up around the house. It was at this time that Gudrid, Karlsefni's wife, gave birth to a male child, and the boy was called Snorri. In the early part of the second winter the Skrellings came to them again, and these were now much more numerous than before, and brought with them the same wares as at first. Then said Karlsefni to the women: 'Do ye carry out now the same food, which proved so profitable before, and nought else.' When they saw this they cast their packs in over the palisade. Gudrid was sitting within, in the doorway, beside the cradle of her infant son, Snorri, when a shadow fell upon the door, and a woman in a black namkirtle (70) entered. She was short in stature, and wore a fillet about her head; her hair was of a light chestnut colour, and she was pale of hue, and so big-eyed, that never before had eyes so large been seen in a human skull. She went up to where Gudrid was seated, and said: 'What is thy name?' 'My name is Gudrid; but what is thy name?' 'My name is Gudrid,' says she. The housewife, Gudrid, motioned her with her hand to a seat beside her; but it so happened, that, at that very instant Gudrid heard a great crash, whereupon the woman vanished, and at that same moment one of the Skrellings, who had tried to seize their weapons<sup>1</sup>, was killed by one of Karlsefni's followers. At this the Skrellings fled precipitately, leaving their garments and wares behind them; and not a soul, save Gudrid alone, beheld this woman. 'Now we must needs take counsel together,' says Karlsefni, 'for that I believe they will visit us a third time, in great numbers<sup>2</sup>, and attack us. Let us now adopt this plan: ten of our number shall go out upon the cape, and show themselves there, while the remainder of our company shall go into the woods and hew a clearing for our cattle, when the troop approaches from the forest. We will also take our bull, and let him go in advance of us.' The lie of the land was such that the proposed meeting-place had the lake upon the one side, and the forest upon the other. Karlsefni's advice was now carried into execution. The Skrellings advanced to the spot which Karlsefni had selected for the encounter, and a battle was fought there, in which great numbers of the band of the Skrellings were slain. There was one man among the Skrellings, of large size and fine bearing, whom Karlsefni concluded must be their chief. One of the Skrellings picked up an axe, and having looked at it for a time, he brandished it about one of his companions, and hewed at him, and on the instant the man fell dead. Thereupon the big man seized the axe, and after examining it for a moment, he hurled it as far as he could, out into the sea; then they fled helter-skelter into the woods, and thus their intercourse came to an end. Karlsefni and his party<sup>3</sup> remained there throughout the winter, but in the spring Karlsefni announces, that he is not minded to remain there longer, but will return to Greenland. They now made ready for the voyage, and carried away with them much booty in vines and grapes<sup>4</sup>, and peltries. They sailed out upon the high seas, and brought their ship safely to Ericsfirth, where they remained during the winter.

FREYDIS CAUSES<sup>5</sup> THE BROTHERS TO BE PUT TO DEATH.

There was now much talk anew, about a Wineland-voyage, for this was reckoned both a profitable and an honourable enterprise. The same summer that Karlsefni arrived from Wineland, a ship from Norway arrived in Greenland. This ship was commanded by two brothers, Helgi and Finnbogi, who passed the winter in Greenland. They were descended from an Icelandic family of the East-firths<sup>1</sup>. It is now to be added, that Freydis, Eric's daughter, set out from her home at Gardar, and waited upon the brothers, Helgi and Finnbogi, and invited them to sail with their vessel to Wineland, and to share with her equally all of the good things which they might succeed in obtaining there. To this they agreed, and she departed thence to visit her brother, Leif, and ask him to give her the house which he had caused to be erected in Wineland, but he made her the same answer [as that which he had given Karlsefni], saying, that he would lend the house, but not give it. It was stipulated between Karlsefni and Freydis, that each should have on ship-board thirty able-bodied men<sup>2</sup>, besides the women; but Freydis immediately violated this compact, by concealing five men more [than this number], and this the brothers did not discover before they arrived in Wineland. They now put out to sea, having agreed beforehand, that they would sail in company, if possible, and although they were not far apart from each other, the brothers arrived somewhat in advance, and carried their belongings up to Leif's house. Now when Freydis arrived, her ship was discharged, and the baggage carried up to the house, whereupon Freydis exclaimed: 'Why did you carry your baggage in here?' 'Since we believed,' said they, 'that all promises<sup>3</sup> made to us would be kept.' 'It was to me that Leif loaned the house,' says she, 'and not to you.' Whereupon Helgi exclaimed: 'We brothers cannot hope to rival thee in wrong-dealing.' They thereupon carried their baggage forth, and built a hut, above the sea, on the bank of the lake, and put all in order about it; while Freydis caused wood to be felled, with which to load her ship. The winter now set in, and the brothers suggested, that they should amuse themselves by playing games. This they did for a time, until the folk began to disagree<sup>4</sup>, when dissensions arose between them, and the games came to an end, and the visits between the houses ceased; and thus it continued far into the winter. One morning early, Freydis arose from her bed, and dressed herself, but did not put on her shoes and stockings. A heavy dew had fallen<sup>5</sup>, and she took her husband's cloak, and wrapped it about her, and then walked to the brothers' house, and up to the door, which had been only partly closed<sup>6</sup> by one of the men, who had gone out a short time before. She pushed

the door open, and stood, silently, in the doorway for a time. Finnbogi, who was lying on the innermost side of the room, was awake, and said : 'What dost thou wish here, Freydis?' She answers : 'I wish thee to rise, and go out with me, for I would speak with thee.' He did so, and they walked to a tree, which lay close by the wall of the house, and seated themselves upon it. 'How art thou pleased here?' says she. He answers : 'I am well pleased with the fruitfulness of the land, but I am ill-content with the breach which has come between us, for, methinks, there has been no cause for it.' 'It is even as thou sayest,' says she, 'and so it seems to me ; but my errand to thee is, that I wish to exchange ships with you brothers, for that ye have a larger ship than I, and I wish to depart from here.' 'To this I must accede,' says he, 'if it is thy pleasure.' Therewith they parted, and she returned home, and Finnbogi to his bed. She climbed up into bed, and awakened Thorvard with her cold feet, and he asked her why she was so cold and wet. She answered, with great passion : 'I have been to the brothers,' says she, 'to try to buy their ship, for I wished to have a larger vessel, but they received my overtures so ill, that they struck me, and handled me very roughly ; what time thou, poor wretch, wilt neither avenge my shame nor thy own, and I find, perforce, that I am no longer in Greenland, moreover I shall part from thee unless thou wraekest vengeance for this.' And now he could stand her taunts no longer, and ordered the men to rise at once, and take their weapons, and this they did, and they then proceeded directly to the house of the brothers, and entered it, while the folk were asleep<sup>1</sup>, and seized and bound them, and led each one out, when he was bound ; and as they came out, Freydis caused each one to be slain. In this wise all of the men were put to death, and only the women were left, and these no one would kill. At this Freydis exclaimed : 'Hand me an axe!' This was done, and she fell upon the five women, and left them dead. They returned home, after this dreadful deed, and it was very evident that Freydis was well content with her work. She addressed her companions, saying : 'If it be ordained for us, to come again to Greenland, I shall contrive the death of any man who shall speak of these events. We must give it out, that we left them living here, when we came away.' Early in the spring, they equipped the ship, which had belonged to the brothers, and freighted it with all of the products of the land, which they could obtain, and which the ship would carry. Then they put out to sea, and, after a prosperous voyage, arrived with their ship in Ericsfirth early in the summer. Karlsefni was there, with his ship all ready to sail, and was awaiting a fair wind ; and people say, that a ship richer laden, than that which he commanded, never left Greenland.

CONCERNING FREYDIS.

Freydis now went to her home, since it had remained unharmed during her absence. She bestowed liberal gifts upon all of her companions, for she was anxious to screen her guilt. She now established herself at her home; but her companions were not all so close-mouthed, concerning their misdeeds and wickedness, that rumours did not get abroad at last. These finally reached her brother, Leif, and he thought it a most shameful story. He thereupon took three of the men, who had been of Freydis' party, and forced them all at the same time to a confession of the affair, and their stories entirely agreed. 'I have no heart,' says Leif, 'to punish my sister, Freydis, as she deserves, but this I predict of them, that there is little prosperity in store for their offspring.' Hence it came to pass, that no one from that time forward thought them worthy of aught but evil. It now remains to take up the story from the time when Karlsefni made his ship ready, and sailed out to sea. He had a successful voyage<sup>1</sup>, and arrived in Norway safe and sound. He remained there during the winter, and sold his wares, and both he and his wife were received with great favour by the most distinguished men of Norway. The following spring he put his ship in order for the voyage to Iceland; and when all his preparations had been made, and his ship was lying at the wharf, awaiting favourable winds, there came to him a Southerner<sup>2</sup>, a native of Bremen in the Saxonland, who wished to buy his 'house-neat'<sup>3</sup>. 'I do not wish to sell it,' said he. 'I will give thee half a "mörk" in gold for it' (71), says the Southerner. This Karlsefni thought a good offer, and accordingly closed the bargain. The Southerner went his way, with the 'house-neat,' and Karlsefni knew not what wood it was, but it was 'mösur'<sup>4</sup>, come from Wineland.

Karlsefni sailed away, and arrived with his ship in the north of Iceland, in Skaga-firth. His vessel was beached there during the winter, and in the spring he bought Glaumbœiar-land (59), and made his home there, and dwelt there as long as he lived, and was a man of the greatest prominence. From him and his wife, Gudrid, a numerous and goodly lineage is descended. After Karlsefni's death, Gudrid, together with her son, Snorri, who was born in Wineland, took charge of the farmstead; and when Snorri was married, Gudrid went abroad, and made a pilgrimage to the South<sup>5</sup>, after which she returned again to the home of her son, Snorri, who had caused a church to be built at Glaumbær. Gudrid then took the veil and became an anchorite, and lived there the rest of her days. Snorri had a son, named Thorgeir, who was the father of Ingveld, the mother of Bishop Brand. Hallfrid was the name of the daughter of Snorri, Karlsefni's son ; she was the mother of Runolf, Bishop Thorlak's father. Biorn was the name of [another] son of Karlsefni and Gudrid ; he was the father of Thorunn, the mother of Bishop Biorn. Many men are descended from Karlsefni, and he has been blessed with a numerous and famous posterity ; and of all men Karlsefni has given the most exact accounts of all these voyages, of which something has now been recounted.

CHAPTER IV.

WINELAND IN THE ICELANDIC ANNALS.

IN addition to the longer sagas of the discovery and exploration of Wineland, and the scattered references in other Icelandic historical literature, already adduced, the country finds mention in still another class of Icelandic records. These records are the chronological lists of notable events, in and out of Iceland, which are known as the Icelandic Annals. It has been conjectured that the archetype of these Annals was compiled either by the learned Ari, the father of Icelandic historiography, or in the century in which he lived<sup>1</sup>. Although there is the best of reasons for the belief, that the first writer of Icelandic Annals was greatly indebted to Ari the Learned for the knowledge of many of the events which he records, such written evidence as we have from the century in which Ari lived, would seem to indicate that this kind of literature had not then sprung into being<sup>2</sup>.

A recent writer in an able disquisition upon this subject arrives at the conclusion, that the first book of Annals was written in the south of Iceland about the year 1280<sup>3</sup>. While this theory is apparently well grounded, it is, nevertheless, true that the first writer of Icelandic Annals of whom we have definite knowledge, was an Icelandic priest named Einar Hafliðason [Einarr Hafliðason], who was born in 1307, and died in 1393<sup>4</sup>. The fact that Einar was the compiler of such a book is gleaned from his own work, through an entry under the year 1304, in which his birth is recorded in such wise as to point unmistakably to his authorship<sup>1</sup>. This collection of Annals is contained in the parchment manuscript AM. 420 b, 4to, which has received the name, Lawman's Annals [Lögmanns-Annáll], probably from the office held by some one of its former owners<sup>2</sup>. Under the year 1121, we find in these Annals the entry: 'Bishop Eric Uppsi<sup>3</sup> sought Wineland<sup>4</sup>.'

The next considerable collection of Annals, the date of which we are enabled to determine with tolerable accuracy, is that appended to the Flatey Book, the manuscript of which has already been described. These Annals were written by the priest Magnus Thorhallsson<sup>5</sup>, and doubtless completed before the year 1395, for all entries cease in the previous year. Among the recorded events of the year 1121 it is stated that 'Eric, Bishop of Greenland, went in search of Wineland<sup>6</sup>.'

Of a riper antiquity than either of the foregoing works, are, in all likelihood, the so-called Annales Reseniani, the original vellum manuscript of which was destroyed by the fire of 1728. A paper copy from this original, written by Arni Magnusson, is preserved in AM. 424, 4to. The dates included in these Annals extend from the year 228 to 1295 inclusive, and it has been conjectured that these records were compiled before the year 1319<sup>7</sup>. Here, under the year 1121, occurs the statement: 'Bishop Eric sought Wineland<sup>8</sup>.'

<sup>1</sup> The entry is as follows: 'Rev. Einar Haflidason born, "in octava nativitatís gloriosæ virginis Mariæ." I, a sinful man, bid you who may read or hear these letters pray to God for me, that at the day of judgment I may be numbered among his chosen men,' &c. ['Fœddr Síra Einar Haflidason, in Octava nativitatís gloriosæ virginis Mariæ. Bið ek syndugr maðr þetta letr lesandi eðr heyrandi, at þér biðit fyrir mér til Guðs, svá at ek mætti reiknast á dómsdegi í meðal hans valdra manna.'] Prof. Storm agrees with Arni Magnusson in the opinion that Einar himself wrote these Annals, from the beginning down to the year 1362. Cf. Storm, Isl. Ann. ubi sup. pp. xxi and 264.

<sup>6</sup> 'Eiríkr biskup af Grönlandi fór at leita Vín landz.' The verb 'leita' has the double significance, 'to go to for aid,' and 'to go in search of.' The entry here seems to point clearly to the latter interpretation, literally, 'went to seek.'

A parchment manuscript is preserved in the Royal Library of Copenhagen, No. 2087, 4to, old collection, which contains the annals known as Annales regii. These are written in various hands, and are brought down to the year 1341. From the first entry down to the year 1306, the hand is the same, and from this fact the conclusion has been drawn, that this portion of the manuscript was completed not later than 1307<sup>1</sup>. Against the year 1121 we find the entry: 'Bishop Eric of Greenland went in search of Wineland<sup>2</sup>.'

Similar entries to these occur in two other collections of Icelandic Annals, which may be mentioned here, for, while these are, in their present form, of much more recent creation than those already noticed, they still seem to have drawn their material from elder lost vellums. One of these, Henrik Höyer's Annals, derives its name from its first owner, who died in Bergen in the year 1615. It is a paper manuscript contained in AM. 22, fol., and bears strong internal evidence of having been copied from an Icelandic original, which has since disappeared<sup>3</sup>. The entry in this manuscript under the year 1121 is: 'Bishop Eric sought Wineland<sup>4</sup>.'

The other modern collection, known as Gottskalk's Annals, is contained in a parchment manuscript in the Royal Library of Stockholm, No. 5, 8vo, which it is believed was chiefly written by one Gottskalk Jonsson [Gottskálf Jónsson], a priest, who lived in the north of Iceland in the sixteenth century, and it has been conjectured, from internal evidence, that the portion of the compilation prior to the year 1394 was copied from a lost manuscript<sup>5</sup>. The entry under the year 1121 corresponds with those already quoted: 'Eric, the Greenlanders' bishop, sought Wineland<sup>6</sup>.'

From these different records, varying slightly in phraseology, but all of the same purport, we may safely conclude that, in the year 1121, a certain Bishop of Greenland, called Eric Uppi, went upon a voyage in search of Wineland. It is the sum of information which the Annals have to give concerning that country, and is meagre enough, for we are not only left unenlightened as to why the voyage was undertaken, to have been confused or misunderstood by the copyist. It reads: 'Thorgils Erche biskup leitai Vínlands.' ['Arch-bishop Thorgils sought Wineland.'] The name Eiríkr appears to have been misread, and that of Thorgils carried over from the preceding sentence, as may be better seen by comparison with Arni Magnússon's entry of the same year: 'Sætt Hafliða oc Þorgils, Eiríkr byscop leitaði Vínlandz.'

but we are not even informed whether the bishop succeeded in finding the country of which he went in search. It is not possible to obtain much additional knowledge concerning this Bishop Eric elsewhere. It seems altogether probable that he was the 'Greenlanders' bishop Eric Gnuþ's son,' mentioned in a genealogical list in Landnáma<sup>1</sup>, and it is clear that if this be the same Eric, he was by birth an Icelander. This view is in a slight measure confirmed by an entry in the Lawman's Annals under the year 1112 [in the Annals of the Flatey Book under the year 1113] wherein the journey of Bishop Eric is recorded<sup>2</sup>, a 'journey' presumably undertaken away from Iceland, and probably to Greenland. In the ancient Icelandic scientific work called Rímþegla, in a list of those men who had been bishops at Gardar, the episcopal seat in Greenland, Eric heads the list<sup>3</sup>, while in a similar list of Greenland bishops in the Flatey Book, Eric's name is mentioned third<sup>4</sup>. No record of Bishop Eric's ordination has been preserved, and none of his fate, unless indeed, it be written in the brief memorial of his Wineland voyage. It has been conjectured that this voyage to Wineland was undertaken as a missionary enterprise, a speculation which seems to have been suggested solely by the ecclesiastical office of the chief participant. It has been further conjectured, since we read in the Annals of the ordination of a new bishop for Greenland in 1124<sup>5</sup>, that Eric must have perished in the undertaking. The date of his death is nowhere given, and it is possible that the entry in the Annals, under the year 1121, is a species of necrological record. It is, in any event, the last surviving mention of Wineland the Good in the elder Icelandic literature.

Although no subsequent visit to Wineland is recorded, a portion of the American coastland, seen by the original explorers, does appear to have been visited by certain of the Greenland colonists, more than a hundred years after Bishop Eric's Wineland voyage.

A parchment manuscript, AM. 420 a, 4to, contains a collection of Annals, known as the Elder Skálholt Annals [Skálholts-Annáll hinn forni], not heretofore cited because of a lacuna covering the year 1121. This manuscript, which Arni Magnusson obtained from Skálholt, in the south of Iceland, and which he conjectures may have belonged to Skálholt church, or to Bishop Bryniolf's private library<sup>6</sup>, is believed to have been written about the year 1362<sup>1</sup>. We find in this, against the year 1347, the following record: 'There came also a ship from Greenland, less in size than small Icelandic trading vessels. It came into the outer Stream-firth. It was without an anchor. There were seventeen men on board, and they had sailed to Markland, but had afterwards been driven hither by storms at sea<sup>2</sup>.' The Annals of Gottskalk record the simple fact in the same year: 'a ship from Greenland came into the mouth of Stream-firth<sup>3</sup>.' On the other hand the Annals of the Flatey Book, under the year 1347, have the following more particular record: 'A ship came then from Greenland, which had sailed to Markland, and there were eighteen men on board<sup>4</sup>.'

This scanty record is the last historical mention of a voyage undertaken by Leif's fellow-countrymen to a part of the land which he had discovered three hundred years before. The nature of the information indicates that the knowledge of the discovery had not altogether faded from the memories of the Icelanders settled in Greenland. It seems further to lend a measure of plausibility to a theory that people from the Greenland colony may, from time to time, have visited the coast to the south-west of their home for supplies of wood, or for some kindred purpose. The visitors in this case had evidently intended to return directly from Markland to Greenland, and had they not been driven out of their course to Iceland, the probability is that this voyage would never have found mention in Icelandic chronicles, and all knowledge of it must have vanished as completely as did the colony to which the Markland visitors belonged.

CHAPTER V.

NOTICES OF DOUBTFUL VALUE ; FICTIONS.

IT will be remembered that a passage in the Book of Settlement [Landnámabók] recites the discovery, by one Ari Marsson, of a country lying westward from Ireland, called White-men's-land, or Ireland the Great. This White-men's-land is also mentioned in the Saga of Eric the Red, and in both places is assigned a location in the vicinity of Wineland the Good. Many writers have regarded this White-men's-land as identical with a strange country, the discovery of which is recounted in the Eyrbyggja Saga, having been led to this conclusion, apparently, from the fact that both unknown lands lay to the 'westward,' and that there is a certain remote resemblance between the brief particulars of the Eric's Saga and the more detailed narrative of Eyrbyggja.

It is related in the Eyrbyggja Saga<sup>1</sup> that a certain Biorn Asbrandsson [Björn Ásbrandsson] became involved in an intrigue with a married woman named Thurid, which resulted in his wounding the affronted husband and slaying two of the husband's friends, for which he was banished from Iceland for the term of three years. Biorn went abroad, led an adventurous life, and received the name of 'kappi' [champion, hero] on account of his valorous deeds. He subsequently returned to Iceland, where he was afterwards known as the Broadwickers'-champion [Breiðvikingakappi]. He brought with him on his return not only increase of fame, but the added graces of bearing due to his long fellowship with foreign chieftains, and he soon renewed his attentions to his former mistress. The husband, fearing to cope alone with so powerful a rival, invoked the aid of one skilled in the black art to raise a storm, which should overwhelm the object of his enmity. The hero, however, after three days of exposure to the preternaturally-agitated elements, returned exhausted, but in safety, to his home. The husband then prevailed upon his powerful brother-in-law, the godi (72) Snorri, to come to his assistance, and as a result of Snorri's intervention, Biorn agreed to leave the country. He accordingly rode 'south, to a ship in Lava-haven<sup>2</sup>, in which he took passage that same summer, but they were rather late in putting to sea. They sailed away with a north-east wind, which prevailed far into the summer, but nothing was heard of this ship for a long time afterwards<sup>1</sup>.

Further on in the same saga we read of the fortuitous discovery of this same Biorn by certain of his fellow-countrymen, and as the account of their strange meeting contains the sole description of this unknown land, it may best be given in the words of the saga. 'It was in the latter days of Olaf the Saint<sup>2</sup> that Gudleif [Gudleifr Guðlaugsson] engaged in a trading-voyage westward to Dublin, and when he sailed from the west it was his intention to proceed to Iceland. He sailed to the westward of Ireland, and had easterly gales and winds from the north-east, and was driven far to the westward over the sea and toward the south-west, so that they had lost all track of land. The summer was then far spent, and they uttered many prayers that they might be permitted to escape from the sea, and it befell thereupon that they became aware of land. It was a great country, but they did not know what country it was. Gudleif and his companions determined to sail to the land, for they were weary with battling with the tempestuous sea. They found a good harbour there, and they had been alongside the land but a short time when men came toward them. They did not recognize a single man, but it rather seemed to them that they were speaking Irish; soon so great a throng of men had drawn about them that they amounted to several hundreds. These people thereupon seized them all and bound them, and then drove them up upon the land. They were then taken to a meeting, at which their case was considered. It was their understanding that some [of their captors] wished them to be slain, while others would have them distributed among the people<sup>3</sup> and thrown into bondage. While this was being argued they descried a body of men riding, and a banner was carried in their midst<sup>4</sup>, from which they concluded that some manner of chieftain must be in the company; and when this band drew near they saw a tall and warlike man riding beneath the banner; he was far advanced in years, however, and his hair was white. All of the people assembled bowed before this man, and received him as he had been their lord; they soon observed that all questions and matters for decision were submitted to him. This man then summoned Gudleif and his fellows, and when they came before him he addressed them in the Northern tongue [i. e. Icelandic], and asked them to what country they belonged. They responded that they were, for the most part, Icelanders. This man asked which of them were the Icelanders.

Gudleif then advanced before this man, and greeted him worthily, and he received his salutations graciously, and asks from what part of Iceland they came, and Gudleif replies that he comes from Borgarfirth. He then enquired from what part of Borgarfirth he came, and Gudleif informs him. After this he asked particularly after every one of the leading men of Borgarfirth and Breidafirth, and in the course of the conversation he asks after Snorri Godi and Thurid, of Fródá [Fróðá], his sister, and he enquired especially after all details concerning Fródá, and particularly regarding the boy Kiartan<sup>1</sup>, who was then the master at Fródá. The people of the country, on the other hand, demanded that some judgment should be reached concerning the ship's crew. After this the tall man left them, and called about him twelve of his men, and they sat together for a long time in consultation, after which they betook themselves to the [general] meeting. Thereupon the tall man said to Gudleif and his companions: "We, the people of this country, have somewhat considered your case, and the inhabitants have given your affair into my care, and I will now give you permission to go whither ye list; and even though it may seem to you that the summer is far spent, still I would counsel you to leave here, for the people here are untrustworthy and hard to deal with, and have already formed the belief that their laws have been broken." Gudleif replied: "If it be vouchsafed us to reach our native land, what shall we say concerning him who has granted us our freedom." He answers: "That I may not tell you, for I cannot bear that my relatives and foster-brothers should have such a voyage hither, as ye would have had if ye had not had my aid; but now I am so advanced in years," said he, "that the hour may come at any time when age shall rise above my head; and even though I should live yet a little longer, still there are those here in the land who are more powerful than I who would offer little mercy to strangers, albeit these are not in this neighbourhood where ye have landed." Afterward this man aided them in equipping their ship, and remained with them until there came a fair wind, which enabled them to put to sea. But before he and Gudleif parted, this man took a gold ring from his hand and handed it to Gudleif, and with it a goodly sword; and he then said to Gudleif: "If it be granted thee to come again to thy father-land, then do thou give this sword to Kiartan, the master at Fródá, and the ring to his mother." Gudleif said: "What shall I reply as to who sends these precious things?" He answers: "Say that he sends them who was more of a friend of the mistress at Fródá, than of the Godi at Helgafell, her brother. But if any persons shall think they have discovered from this to whom these treasures belonged, give them my message, that I forbid any man to go in search of me, for it would be a most desperate undertaking, unless he should fare as successfully as ye have in finding a landing-place; for here is an extensive country with few harbours, and over all a disposition to deal harshly with strangers, unless it befall as it has in this case." After this they parted. Gudleif and his men put to sea, and arrived in Ireland late in the autumn, and passed the winter in Dublin; but in the summer they sailed to Iceland, and Gudleif delivered the treasures, and all men held of a verity that this man was Biorn Broadwickers'-champion; but people have no other proof of this, save these particulars, which have now been related (73).'

It will be observed that the narrator of the saga does not in this incident once connect this unknown land with White-men's-land, nor does he offer any suggestion as to its situation. The work of identifying this strange country with White-men's-land, and so with Wineland the Good, has been entirely wrought by the modern commentator<sup>1</sup>. If we accept as credible a meeting so miraculous as the one here described, if we disregard the statements of the narrative showing the existence of horses in this unknown land, which the theorist has not hesitated to do<sup>2</sup>, and, finally, if we assume that there was at this time an Irish colony or one speaking a kindred tongue in North America, we may conclude that Biorn's adopted home was somewhere on the eastern North-American coast. If, however, we read the statements of the saga as we find them, they seem all to tend to deny this postulate, rather than to confirm it. The entire story has a decidedly fabulous appearance, and, as has been suggested by a learned editor of the saga, a romantic cast, which is not consonant with the character of the history in which it appears<sup>3</sup>. A narrative, the truth of which the narrator, himself, tells us had not been ratified by collateral evidence, and whose details are so vague and indefinite, seems to afford historical evidence of a character so equivocal, that it may well be dismissed without further consideration.

Of an altogether different nature from the narrative of discovery above recited, is the brief notice of the finding of a new land, set down in the Icelandic Annals toward the end of the thirteenth century. In the Annales regii, in the year 1285, the record reads: 'Adalbrand and Thorvald, Helgi's sons, found New-land<sup>1</sup>;' in the Annals of the Flatey Book, under the same year, 'Land was found to the westward off Iceland<sup>2</sup>;' and again in Gottskalk's Annals an entry exactly similar to that of the Flatey Book. In Höyer's Annals the entry is of a different character: 'Helgi's sons sailed into Greenland's uninhabited regions<sup>3</sup>.'

In the parchment manuscript AM. 415, 4to, written, probably, about the beginning of the fourteenth century<sup>4</sup>, is a collection of annals, called 'Annales vetustissimi,' and here, under the year 1285, is an entry similar to that of the Flatey Book: 'Land found to the westward off Iceland<sup>5</sup>.' In the Skálholt Annals, on the other hand, the only corresponding entry against the year 1285, is: 'Down-islands discovered<sup>6</sup>.'

It required but the similarity between the names New-land and Newfoundland to arouse the effort to identify the two countries; and the theory thus created was supposed to find confirmation in a passage in a copy of a certain document known as Bishop Gizur Einarsson's Register [bréfa-bók], for the years 1540-47, which is contained in a paper manuscript of the seventeenth century<sup>7</sup>, AM. 266, fol. This passage is as follows: 'Wise men have said, that you must sail to the south-west from Krisuvik mountain to Newland<sup>8</sup>.' Krisuvik mountain is situated on the promontory of Reykianess, the south-western extremity of Iceland, and, as has been recently pointed out<sup>9</sup>, to sail the course suggested by Bishop Gizur would in all probability land the adventurous mariner in south-eastern Greenland. The record of the Annals, however, is so explicit, that, in determining the site of 'Newland,' we do not need to orient ourselves by extraneous evidence. We are informed, that, in 1285, Helgi's sons sailed into Greenland's 'óbygðir,' the name by which the Greenland colonists were wont to designate the uninhabited east coast of Greenland; and as it is elsewhere distinctly stated that the 'Newland,' which these men discovered in the same year, lay to the 'westward off Iceland<sup>10</sup>,' there can be little room for hesitancy in reaching the conclusion that 'Newland,' the 'óbygðir' and the 'Down-islands,' all lie together, and

<sup>7</sup> Cf. Katalog AM. Håndskrifter, vol. i. p. 240. It is, perhaps, worthy of note that Adalbrand was a priest in the south of Iceland, not far from Skálholt, where Bishop Gizur's book was, doubtless, written, and whither any record which Adalbrand or his brother may have left, might easily have found its way.

are probably only different names for the same discovery. However this may be, it is at least manifest, from the record, that if Newland was not a part of the eastern coast of Greenland<sup>1</sup>, there is nothing to indicate that it was anywhere in the region of Newfoundland.

A few years after this discovery is recorded, namely in 1289, we find the following statement in the Flatey Annals: 'King Eric sends Rolf to Iceland to seek New-land<sup>2</sup>;' and again in the next year: 'Rolf travelled about Iceland soliciting men for a New-land voyage<sup>3</sup>.' No additional information has been preserved touching this enterprise, and it therefore seems probable that if the voyage was actually undertaken, it was barren of results. The Flatey Annals note the death of Rolf, Land-Rolf [Landa-Rólf] as he was called, in 1295<sup>4</sup>, and as no subsequent seeker of Newland is named in Icelandic history, it may be assumed that the spirit of exploration died with him.

This brief record of the Annals is unquestionably historically accurate, moreover there may be somewhat of an historical foundation for the adventures of the Broadwickers'-champion recounted in the Eyrbyggja Saga; neither of these notices of discovery, however, appears to have any connection with the discovery of Wineland; they have been considered here chiefly because of the fact that they have been treated in the past as if they had a direct bearing upon the Wineland history.

The historical and quasi-historical material relating to the discovery of Wineland, has now been presented. A few brief notices of Helluland, contained in the later Icelandic literature, remain for consideration. These notices necessarily partake of the character of the sagas in which they appear, and as these sagas are in a greater or less degree pure fictions, the notices cannot be regarded as possessing any historical value.

First among these unhistorical sagas is the old mythical tale [fornsaga] of Arrow-Odd [Qrvar-Odds Saga], of which two recensions exist; the more recent<sup>5</sup> and inferior version<sup>6</sup> is that which contains the passages wherein Helluland is mentioned, as follows: "But I will tell thee where Ogmund [Qgmundr] is; he is come into that firth which is called Skuggi<sup>7</sup>, it is in Helluland's deserts . . . ; he has gone thither because <sup>1</sup> It has even been suggested that the supposed land may have been an ice-floe. Cf. Zahrtmann, 'Om Zeniernes Reiser i Norden,' in Nordisk Tidskrift for Oldkyndighed, Copenh. 1833, p. 24.

<sup>7</sup> This firth is also referred to in the fictitious Gunnars saga keldugnúpsfífls, Copenh. 1866, p. 51. Although Helluland is not mentioned by name, the context appears to indicate that the firth was intended to have a location similar to that assigned it in Arrow-Odd's Saga.

he does not wish to meet thee ; now thou mayest track him home, if thou wishest, and see how it fares." Odd said thus it should be. Thereupon they sail until they come into Greenland's sea, when they turn south and west around the land. . . . They sail now until they come to Helluland, and lay their course into the Skuggi-firth. And when they had reached the land the father and son went ashore, and walked until they saw where there was a fortification, and it seemed to them to be very strongly built<sup>1</sup>.

In the same category with Arrow-Odd's Saga may be placed two other mythical sagas, the Saga of Halfdan Eysteinnsson [Hálfðanar saga Eysteinnssonar], and the Saga of Halfdan Brana's-fosterling [Hálfðanar saga Brønufostra]; in the first of these the passage containing the mention of Helluland is as follows: 'Raknar brought Helluland's deserts under his sway, and destroyed all the giants there<sup>2</sup>.' In the second of these last-mentioned sagas the hero is driven out of his course at sea, until he finally succeeds in beaching his ship upon 'smooth sands' beside 'high cliffs;' 'there was much drift-wood on the sands, and they set about building a hut, which was soon finished. Halfdan frequently ascended the glaciers, and some of the men bore him company . . . . The men asked Halfdan what country this could be. Halfdan replied that they must be come to Helluland's deserts<sup>3</sup>.'

Belonging to a class of fictitious sagas known as 'landvættasögur' [stories of a country's guardian spirits], is the folk-tale of Bard the Snow-fell-god [Bárðar saga Snæfellsáss]. The first chapter of this tale begins: 'There was a king named Dumb, who ruled over those gulfs, which extend northward around Helluland and are now called Dumb's sea<sup>4</sup>.' Subsequently we find brief mention of a king of Helluland, of whom Gest, the son of the hero of the saga, says: 'I have never seen him before, but I have been told by my relatives that the king was called Rakin<sup>1</sup>, and from their account I believe I recognize him; he at one time ruled over Helluland and many other countries, and after he had long ruled these lands he caused himself to be buried alive, together with five hundred men, at Raknslodi; he murdered his father and mother, and many other people; it seems to me probable, from the reports of other people, that his burial-mound is northward in Helluland's deserts<sup>2</sup>.' Gest goes in quest of this mound, sails to Greenland's deserts, where, having traversed the lava-fields [!] for three days on foot, he at length discovers the burial-mound upon an island near the sea-coast; 'some men say that this mound was situated to the northward off Helluland, but wherever it was, there were no settlements in the neighbourhood<sup>3</sup>.'

The brief extracts here quoted will suffice to indicate not only the fabulous character of the sagas in which they appear, but they serve further to show how completely the discoveries of Leif, and the explorations of Karlsefni had become distorted in the popular memory of the Icelanders at the time these tales were composed, which was probably in the thirteenth or fourteenth century<sup>4</sup>. The Helluland of these stories is an unknown region, relegated, in the popular superstition, to the trackless wastes of northern Greenland.

CHAPTER VI.

THE PUBLICATION OF THE DISCOVERY.

THE earliest foreign mention of Wineland appears in the work of the prebendary, Adam of Bremen, called Descriptio insularum aquilonis<sup>1</sup>. The material for this work was obtained by its author during a sojourn at the court of the Danish king, Svend Estridsson, after the year 1069, and probably, very soon thereafter; for his history appears to have been completed before the year 1076, the date of king Svend's death<sup>2</sup>. The most important manuscript of Adam's longer work, the Gesta Hammaburgensis ecclesiæ pontificum, is the Codex Vindobonensis, deposited in the Imperial Library of Vienna under the number 413. This manuscript, written in the thirteenth century<sup>3</sup>, contains also the complete 'description of the Northern islands,' which is partially lacking in the fine manuscript of the same century, contained in the Royal Library of Copenhagen. This 'description' was first printed<sup>4</sup> in Lindenbruch's edition of Adam's work, published in 1595<sup>5</sup>, and is the first printed reference to Wineland, being as follows: 'Moreover he<sup>6</sup> spoke of an island in that ocean discovered by many, which is called Wineland, for the reason that vines grow wild there, which yield the best of wine. Moreover that grain unsown grows there abundantly, is not a fabulous fancy, but, from the accounts of the Danes, we know to be a fact. Beyond this island, it is said, that there is no habitable land in that ocean, but all those regions which are beyond are filled with insupportable ice and boundless gloom, to which Martian thus refers: "One day's sail beyond Thile the sea is frozen." This was essayed not long since by that very enterprising Northmen's prince, Harold<sup>7</sup>, who explored the extent of the northern ocean with his ship, but was scarcely able by retreating to escape in safety from the gulf's enormous abyss<sup>1</sup>, where before his eyes the vanishing bounds of earth were hidden in gloom<sup>2</sup>.

The learned cleric, it will be observed, is very careful to give his authority for a narrative, which evidently impressed him as bordering sharply upon the fabulous. The situation, which he would ascribe to the strange country is inaccurate enough, but the land where vines grow wild and grain self-sown, stripped of the historian's adornments, would accord sufficiently well with the accounts of the discoverers of Wineland to enable us to identify the country, if Adam had not himself given us the name of this land, and thus arrested all uncertainty<sup>3</sup>. It is not strange, however, that with the lapse of time the knowledge of such a land should have been erased from the recollection of the outer world. The author of the so-called 'Breve Chronicon Norvegiæ'<sup>4</sup> is, therefore, constrained to omit all reference to this wonderful land, although his reference to Greenland indicates an acquaintance with that tradition, which in Icelandic geographical notices, already cited, would ascribe Wineland to a more southerly clime, bordering indeed, upon Africa. The manuscript of this history, which has been preserved, belongs to the Earl of Dalhousie<sup>5</sup>, and was probably written between the years 1443 and 1460<sup>6</sup>. The passage mentioned, while it is not strictly pertinent, in a Postquam insulam, ait, terra non invenitur habitabilis in illo oceano, sed omnia quae ultra sunt glacie intolerabili ac caligine immensa plena sunt. Cuius rei Marcianus ita meminit: "Ultra Thilen," inquit, "navigatione unius diei mare concretum est." Temptavit hoc nuper experientissimus Nordmannorum princeps Haraldus. Ed. 1876, p. 187.

<sup>3</sup> As late as 1673 [1689?] Olof Rudbeck would seek to identify this 'Winland,' which Adam mentions, with Finland. 'Ne tamen poetis solis hoc loquendi genus in suis regionum laudationibus familiare fuisse quis existimet, sacras adeat literas quæ Palæstinæ fecunditatem appellatione fluctorum lactis & mellis designant. Tale aliquid, sine omni dubio, Adamo Bremensi quondam persuaserat insulam esse in ultimo septentrione sitam, mari glaciali vicinam, vini feracem, & ea propter fide tamen Danorum, Vinlandiam dictam prout ipse in de situ Daniæ p. m. 37. fateri non dubitat. Sed deceptum eum hac sive Danorum fide, sive credulitate sua planum facit affine isti vocabulum Finlandiæ provinciæ ad Regnum nostrum pertinentis, pro quo apud Snorronem & in Hist. measure indicates, perhaps, the information accessible at this period, to an author who must have been more or less acquainted with the current lore of the land in which the Wineland history was still preserved. Greenland, this author writes, 'which country was discovered and settled by the inhabitants of Thule [Telensibus], and strengthened by the Catholic faith, lies at the western boundary of Europe, almost bordering upon the African isles, where the overflowing sea spreads out<sup>1</sup>.' No quickening evidence came from Iceland until long afterward, and those who saw Adam's Wineland recital, probably regarded it as the artless testimony of a too-credulous historian.

After the publication of Adam of Bremen's work, in 1595, the name of Wineland next recurs in print, in a poem written by the Danish clergyman, Claus Christoffersson Lyschander, called 'Den Grønlandske Chronica' [the Chronicle of Greenland], which was published in Copenhagen in 1608. Founded, apparently, upon the scantiest of historical material, which material was treated with the broadest of poetic licence, the Chronicle is devoid of historical value<sup>2</sup>. Lyschander seems to have derived from Icelandic Annals<sup>3</sup> the knowledge of Bishop Eric's Wineland voyage, and to have elaborated this entry, with the aid of his vivid imagination, into three lines of doggerel in somewhat the following manner:

And Eric of Greenland did the deed,
Planted in Wineland both folk and creed,
Which are there e'en now surviving<sup>4</sup>.

A few years prior to this rhapsody of Lyschander's, the geographer Ortelius had ascribed to the Northmen the credit of the discovery of America. According to Alexander von Humboldt, Ortelius announced this opinion in 1570, and he cites Ortelius' work, 'Theatrum orbis terrarum,' in the edition of 1601<sup>5</sup>. The edition of 1584 of Ortelius' work does not so credit the discovery, but the English edition of 1606 does explicitly, and clearly sets forth upon what foundation the author rests his statement<sup>1</sup>. Ortelius does not seem to have had, and could not well have had at the time he wrote, any acquaintance with Icelandic records; his opinion, as he himself tells us, was based upon the marvellous relation of the voyages of the brothers Zeni, first published in 1558. It is not pertinent to dwell here upon the authenticity of the Zeni discoveries, and while it is true that Ortelius stated the fact, when he announced that the 'New World was entered upon many ages past by certain "islanders" of Greenland and Iceland,' he travelled to it by a circuitous route, and hit upon it, after all, by a happy chance.

The debased taste in Iceland, which followed the age when the greater sagas were committed to writing, found its gratification in the creation of fictitious tales, in recounting the exploits of foreign heroes, and for a time, the garnered wealth of their historical literature was disregarded or forgotten by the people of Iceland. With the revival of learning, which came in post-Reformation times, after a long period of comparative literary inactivity, came a reawakening of interest in the elder literature, and the Icelandic scholars of this era heralded abroad the great wealth of the discarded treasures which their ancestors had amassed.

The first writer in modern times to glean from Icelandic records, and to publish, as thus established, the discovery made by his countrymen, was Arngrim Jonsson [Arngrímur Jónsson], who was born in Iceland in 1568. His various historical works, published during his life-time, were written in Latin, and all, with the exception of the first edition of a single work, issued from presses on the Continent. His writings were, for the most part, devoted to the history of his fatherland and to its defence, but incidentally two of these, at least, refer to the Wineland discovery. The first of these works, 'Crymogœa, sive Rerum Islandicarum,' was published in Hamburg in 1610, 1614, 1630. The notice in this book refers to the discovery of 'New Land' in 1285, and Land-Rolf's expedition to Iceland [undertaken with a view to the exploration of this land], diverges into a consideration of the Frislanda of the Zeni narrative, which the author regards as Iceland, and concludes: 'In truth we believe the country which Land-Rolf sought to be Wineland, formerly so-called by the Icelanders, concerning which island of America, in the region of Greenland, perhaps the modern Estotelandia, elsewhere<sup>1</sup>;' a statement chiefly interesting from the fact that it is the first printed theory as to the location of Wineland.

<sup>1</sup> 'Iosephus Acosta in his booke De Natura noui orbis indeuors by many reasons to proue, that this part of America was originally inhabited by certaine Indians, forced thither by tempestuous weather ouer the South sea which now they call Mare del Zur. But to me it seemes more probable, out of the historie of the two Zeni, gentlemen of Venice [which I haue put down before the Fable of the South sea, and before that of Scandia] that this New World many ages past was entred vpon by some islanders of Europe, as namely of Groenland, Island, and Frisland; being much neerer thereunto than the Indians, nor disioyned thence [as appeares out of the Map] by an Ocean so huge, and to the Indians so vnnaui- gable. Also, what else may we coniecture to be signified by this Norumbega [the name of a North region of America] but that from Norway, signifying a North land, some Colonie in times past hath hither benee transplanted?' The Theatre of the Whole World: Set forth by that Excellent Geographer Abraham Ortelius, London, 1606, p. 5.

In a second book, written ca. 1635<sup>2</sup>, but not published until 1643, Arngrim refers at some length to Karlsefni and his Wineland voyage<sup>3</sup>, which information he states he draws from Hauk's history, and also makes mention of Bishop Eric's Wineland voyage, noting incidentally Adam of Bremen's reference to that country<sup>4</sup>.

Arngrim died in 1648, leaving behind him an unprinted Latin manuscript, which was subsequently translated into Icelandic and published in Iceland under the title 'Gronlandia<sup>5</sup>.' In this treatise he deals more minutely with the Wineland discovery, but it is probable that this book failed to obtain as wide a circulation among the scholars of Europe as his earlier works, and even though it had become well known, it was destined to be followed, a few years later, by a much more exhaustive work, which must have supplanted it.

Although the Icelandic discovery had now been published, the chief documents from which the knowledge of the discovery was drawn, remained for many years in Iceland, where they were practically inaccessible to the foreign student. Arngrim Jonsson was himself, probably, the first to set the example, which, actively followed after his death, soon placed the Icelandic manuscripts within comparatively easy reach of the students of the Continent<sup>6</sup>. We have already seen, incidentally, how certain of these codices were exported; it remained for the tireless bibliophile, Arni Magnusson, to complete the deportation of manuscripts from his fatherland, so that early in the eighteenth century all of the more important early vellums containing the Wineland narrations were lodged in the libraries of Copenhagen. The hugest of all these manuscripts, the Flatey Book, had been brought by the talented Icelander, Thormod Torfæus<sup>1</sup>, from Iceland to Denmark, as a gift to King Frederick the Third.

In the year 1715 Torfæus published the first book devoted exclusively to the discovery of Wineland. In this little work the place of priority is assigned to the account of the discovery as unfolded in the Flatey Book<sup>2</sup>; this is followed by a compendium of the Saga of Eric the Red [Thorfinns Saga], with which the author seems to have become acquainted through a transcript of the Hauk's Book Saga, made by Biorn of Skardsá [Björn á Skarðsá]<sup>3</sup>. The interest which Torfæus' little book elicited was of such a character that the general dissemination of the knowledge of the discovery may almost be said to date from its appearance; the publication of the texts of the sagas upon which Torfæus' book was based was not accomplished, however, until the present century.

In 1837 the sumptuous work entitled 'Antiquitates Americanæ'<sup>4</sup> was published by the Royal Society of Northern Antiquaries of Copenhagen. The book was edited by Carl Christian Rafn, with whom were associated Finn Magnusen and Sveinbiörn Egilsson; the associate editors, however, especially the last-named, seem to have shared to a very limited extent in the preparation of the work; all were scholarly men, well versed in the literature of Iceland. This book was by far the most elaborate which had been published up to that time upon the subject of the Icelandic discovery of America, and in it the texts of the sagas relating to the discovery were first printed, and with these the lesser references bearing upon the discovery, which were scattered through other Icelandic writings. Side by side with the Icelandic texts, Latin and Danish versions of these texts were presented, and along with these the interpretations and theories of the gifted editor, Rafn. The book obtained a wide circulation, and upon it have been based almost all of the numerous treatises upon the same subject, which have since appeared. Rafn's theories touching the Old Stone Tower at Newport, R. I., and the Dighton Picture Rock near Taunton, Mass., have latterly fallen into disfavour, but others of his errors, less palpable than these, if we may judge by recent publications, still exercise potent sway. While the editor of the 'Antiquitates Americanæ' deserves great praise for having been the first to publish to the world the original records, he has seriously qualified the credit to which he is entitled by the extravagant theories and hazardous statements to which he gave currency, and which have prejudiced many readers against the credibility of the records themselves.

Since the publication of the 'Antiquitates Americanæ' the most important and original treatise upon the Wineland discovery which has appeared, is that recently published by Dr. Gustav Storm, Professor of History in the University of Christiania, entitled, 'Studies relating to the Wineland voyages, Wineland's Geography and Ethnography'<sup>1</sup>. These 'Studies' appear to have been the natural sequence of an article upon the vexed question, affecting the site of Wineland, to which reference has already been made<sup>2</sup>. Professor Storm's method of treatment is altogether different from that of Rafn; it is philosophical, logical, and apparently entirely uninfluenced by preconceived theories, being based strictly upon the records. These records of the Icelandic discovery have now been presented here. They clearly establish the fact that some portion of the eastern coast of North America was visited by people of Iceland and the Icelandic colony in Greenland early in the eleventh century. In matters of detail, however, the history of the discovery leaves wide the door to conjecture as to the actual site of Wineland. It was apparently not north of the latitude of northern Newfoundland; present climatic conditions indicate that it was situated somewhat south of this latitude, but how far south the records do not show.

CHAPTER VII.

THE ICELANDIC TEXTS.

THE following texts of the leading sagas, relating to the discovery of Wineland, have been edited to conform, line by line, with the manuscripts, but with normalized orthography, since the reproduction of the manuscripts in type would have no especial significance where the facsimiles of the vellums are themselves given. The chief difficulty which the reading of these manuscripts offers to the unpractised reader is that of supplying the numerous contractions. This is a difficulty which they share with all other Icelandic manuscripts, but, except in a very slight measure, it is not complicated by the real crux, which many Icelandic vellums offer, in their faded writing or blackened parchment; and the phototypic reproductions are therefore, except in portions of two of the pages of Hauk's Book, substantially as legible as the originals.

Although there are many paper copies of the so-called Þorfinns saga karlsefnis of Hauk's Book, and of Eiriks saga rauða of AM. 557, 4to (74), they are based upon the vellum manuscripts of these sagas here given in facsimile, and it has not, therefore, been deemed necessary to record the variants which they contain, or to make especial note of their readings, except in cases where the vellum manuscripts are now indistinct. Certain paper manuscripts, notably AM. 281, 4to, 770 b, 4to, and 118, 8vo, appear to have derived their texts of Þorfinns saga karlsefnis from Hauk's Book, when the two pages 100 b and 101 were in better state than they now are, and these have been of great assistance in the preparation of the printed text<sup>1</sup>; in the few minor instances in which the vellum originals are not clearly to be read, the words of the paper manuscripts are given.

If it be remembered that i and j, i and y, u and v, are used in these manuscripts more or less interchangeably, the unskilled reader should have little difficulty in following the facsimiles of these sagas and comparing these with the normalized texts.

<sup>1</sup> In editing the text of these two pages of Hauk's Book I have been very materially aided by Dr. Valtýr Guðmundsson. Portions of these pages would be well-nigh undecipherable in the original manuscript, without the help afforded by the paper manuscripts, but these indistinct portions are very inconsiderable.

THE HAUK'S BOOK TEXT.

The first scribe of Þorfinns saga karlsefnis, as the Hauk's Book text of the Saga of Eric the Red has been called, has been known as Hauk's 'first Icelandic secretary.' He is, perhaps; chiefly distinguished from his collaborators, particularly from Hauk himself, by the variety of forms which he employs, many of which are, doubtless, due to carelessness. He generally writes both a and æ, ç, but frequently simply e. He uses v for the most part for both u and v, but in a few instances reverses this usage and employs u in the dual capacity. He distinguishes between ð and j, and occasionally between ð and d, although he generally writes d for both ð and d, in one instance, however, writing the same word upon the same page with both ð and d, as on p. 93, Auð, Aud. He writes both fyrsta and fysta, fýri and firi, crístni [p. 97, l. 3] and kristni [p. 97, l. 11], Vífils and Vifvils, and once, apparently a slip, emcirr [emciR] for meirr. Many words are written with a single instead of a double consonant, as Joka for Jokka, knor for knorr, Snori for Snorri, skapstor for skapstórr, many verbs, on the other hand, are written with double in place of single l, as giallda [gjaldla], villdi [vildi]. He writes the genitive [in s] for the most part with s, frequently with double s, as Kelliss, Einarss, the leading exception being in the case of proper names, as Íslandz, Grænlandz, Asvalldz, Þorbrandz, although he also writes [p. 98, l. 12] til moz [til móts], and [p. 93 b, l. 32] landz [lands]. He writes fodr for fýður, broðr for bróður, besti for besti, semiligaz for sæmiligast. The prepositions i and á he usually connects with the succeeding noun, writing both preposition and noun as one word, as iskogi [i skógi], avaldiofs stvðum [á Valhjófs stvðum]. He uses for his negative prefix o [ó] almost exclusively, although he writes [p. 99, l. 3] vgleði [úgleði], and for the feminine pronoun he employs the form hvn, hun [hon], and writes gera [gera, gøra], voro [váru]. He writes his reflexive forms only with a z, as borduz [borðusk], gerdiz [gerðisk], kvez [kvezk]. The forms which he uses seem to indicate clearly, however, that the scribe was, indeed, an Icelander, for they belong to Icelandic, not to Norse, paleography. A single expression, however, which he employs, acquires a certain noteworthiness when contrasted with the language of the scribe of Eiríks saga rauða. This 'first Icelandic secretary' writes [p. 94, ll. 30-1] Einarr var á Íslandi, while the scribe of AM. 557, 4to, has [p. 28, l. 28] Einarr var út hér. The first expression would ordinarily have no significance whatever in determining where the 'Icelandic secretary' was writing, and in all likelihood has none here. If, however, the secretary had written út hér ['out here'] as the scribe of EsR has, instead of á Íslandi ['in Iceland'], we should be better warranted in concluding that his work was done in Iceland.

Hauk, who follows the 'first Icelandic secretary,' if he wrote in Iceland, wrote with one of the peculiarities to be found in Norse vellums, the uniform omission of h before the sibilant l in such words as liðlyndr [hljóðlyndr], lutaðir [hlutaðir], laupa [hlaupa]. He, unlike any of the other scribes of these manuscripts [except the second secretary, as noted below], distinguishes between æ and ǣ, and usually discriminates these correctly, although he writes [p. 99 b, l. 16] bæði for bæði. Hauk distinguishes between d and ð, and between ð and þ, but writes sifan [siðan], and hefji [hefði]. He uses v for both u and v throughout his work, and again, in contrast with the first scribe, writes en in place of enn. He writes ck instead of kk, as ceki for ekki, ockr for okkr, nockot (nokkut), and also qvæð for kvað. He writes iaunnan for jafnan, and substitutes f for þ in such words as aptr, loft, knept; he writes sun for son, and not only many verbs with double ll, but such words as helldr, sialldan. He uses the same reflexive terminations as the first writer.

The third scribe of Þorfinns saga karlsefnis is Hauk's so-called 'second Icelandic secretary.' If this secretary was, indeed, an Icelander, he must have been brought under strong Norwegian influence, for he employs throughout such Norse forms as vurdu [urðu], rið [hríð], liþ [hljóþ] and huggj [hjó]. He writes, for the most part, both æ and ǣ with e, although he also writes nör [nær], and einþótingr [Einfætínggr]; while discriminating between þ and ð, as in the normalized orthography, he writes both ð and d with d. He differs from Hauk in using both u and v, and from both Hauk and the first secretary in writing haar [hár], saad [sáð, sáit], and also in writing sealf [sjálf], sea [sjá]. For eigi he writes both eige and eighe; medr for með, vidr for við, iammykit for jafmikit, iamlangt for jafulangt. He has hafdu for hefðu, bannadu for þannuðu, and writes his reflexive verbal forms as Hauk and the first secretary, as komaz [komask], byz [býsk], but also fundust [fundusk], biuggust [bjoggusk], and parallel with Hauk's lutaðu [hlutuðu], he writes skemtadu [skentuðu]. No one of the three scribes uses accents, and the ø of the printed texts, except in the verbal forms above noted, is generally written o, although occasionally au.

THE AM. 557, 4to TEXT.

The peculiarities of the text of the Saga Eireks rauda, as it is called in the Codex, AM. 557, 4to; many of them point to a later date for this text than that of either Hauk's Book or the Flatey Book, for we find here such forms as giora [gøra], sied [sét], þier [þér], hier [hér], hiellt [helt], and also other forms indicating the modern pronunciation, as eirn [eínn], iáll [jarl], Þosteirn [Þorsteinn]. The scribe does not discriminate between u and v, nor between ð and d, writing d throughout, although he employs þ as in the normalized orthography. He writes both æ and ǣ with æ; and ø, while frequently written simply o, is occasionally also written au, as maurg [mørg], baurn [þörn], laund [lænd], &c. He writes á both 'aa' and a, q is written in qvæt [kvað], ck for kk, as

Jickia [Jykkja], ecki [ekki], ockr [okkr]. Fysta is written for fyrsta; dreing for dreng, and similarly leingi for lengi, geingr for gengr, þveingi for þveingi; hafva is written for hafa, krömu for krámu [kómu], and while i is usually employed as in the normalized texts, the scribe also writes Eirekr, saker, eþter. He writes many proper names as Styrr, Einarr, Þorgeirr in the nominative with a single final r, and occasionally omits the second r in other words; fyður is written both fedr and fauðr, bróður is written broðr, and the omission of the u in such inflected forms, and in the nominative plural of certain nouns is very common. He generally writes the genitive form [in s] with s, although occasionally with z, as Ingialls [Ingjalds], agætz manz [ágæts manns], lambskinz [lambskinns]; he also writes leingzt [lengst], samiligast [sæmiligast], likast [likast]. He generally writes hun [hon] while his contraction indicates hon, but he also writes haun [hon], and haunum [honum]. He uses throughout the same reflexive forms [except in one instance skyzsz for skýzk], writing giordizt [gørðisk], lituduzt [lituðusk], kvæst [kvæzk], &c. Finally, as has already been suggested, the errors, verbal and textual, of which there are many scattered through the saga, seem to point pretty clearly to the faults of a copyist, working, perhaps, from a somewhat illegible original.

THE FLATEY BOOK TEXT.

In the reproduction of the original manuscript of this version of the history it has been found necessary, in order to preserve the text in its actual size, and at the same time have this conform in size to the page of the quarto manuscripts, to divide each column of the Flatey Book text into two parts, and as there are two columns to each page of this folio manuscript, each page of this phototypic reproduction represents one-fourth of the page of the original. The first portion of the narrative, Eiríks þáttur rauða, begins with the second line from the bottom of col. 221 of the Flatey Book, and ends in col. 223, twenty lines from the bottom, with the words 'meðan Herjólfur lifði, ok síðan bjó hann þar eptir fyður sinn.' The second part of the narrative, Grœnlendinga þáttur, begins in col. 281, fifteen lines from the bottom of the page, and is brought to a conclusion in col. 288, in the twenty-sixth line from the top of the page. The hand, which is the same throughout, is that of John Thordsson. In the photographic reproduction of the manuscript it has, of course, been impossible to preserve the colours of the illuminated initials, which are inserted in the original in red and green and blue; the sub-titles, which, like those of Hauk's Book, are written in red, have, like the Hauk's Book titles, been printed in bolder type.

Contrasted with the other texts, the most marked peculiarity of this scribe is, perhaps, the use of æ for e, for which, with very few exceptions, it is uniformly written at the beginning of words, as æigi [eigi], æinn [einn], Æirekr [Eirikr], and very frequently, though not so constantly, in the body of such words as mæira [mæira], ræida [ræida], læitan [læitan], Læifr [Læifr]. This æ of the scribe, which has more the appearance of œ than that of his co-worker Magnus, is used generally for both æ and œ, although œ is occasionally similarly used, there being no discrimination between æ and œ; ø is generally written o, but occasionally also au, and yet again simply o; á is in a few instances written 'æ'; j is uniformly used for the preposition i, as is generally the case in the other manuscripts, and accented i is occasionally written ij, as vijða [vijða], Vijnland [Vinland]; e is almost constantly used in the place of i at the end of words, and sometimes elsewhere, as aller [allir]; e is occasionally written for j, as in fear [ffjár], sea [sjä]; u and v are used interchangeably; d is written throughout for both ð and d; þ is written normally, although in the initial at the beginning of Eiriks þátr we find Þorualldr [Þorvaldr]; n and l are frequently reduplicated in such words as nafn [nafn], Biarnne [Bjarnu]. The double forms mig and mik, eftir and eptir occur, although the usual forms are mig, sig [mik, sik] and eftir, aftr [eptir, aptr]. Fyrst is written fyst, the forms id [it], ad [at] occur, as also ath [at], audith [auðit], voth [vát], vær [vér], kallar [karlar], &c. Síðast is written sidazst, as are other similar forms, and reflexive forms are written with the same termination, as fystizst [fýstisk], kuetzst [kvezk]. The genitive [in s] is usually written with s, although the forms Íslandz, as also lanz, Branz occur; q is, for the most part, substituted for k in kveða and its inflected forms. In this manuscript, as in Hauk's Book, and AM. 557, 4to, með is almost always written with the contracted equivalent, and so also is ok (and) with a sign corresponding to our symbol (&).

The facsimiles are throughout exact reproductions of the manuscripts, so far as it is possible to reproduce these by photographic process.

11. bóndi [f] hönd henni, ok leiddi hana til þess sætis, sem henni var búit. Þorkell bað
12. hana þá renna þar augum yfir hjú ok hjörð<sup>1</sup> ok svá hfbýli. Hon var fá-

16. er þar váru til. Hon hafði mersingarspón ok kníf tannskeptan<sup>2</sup>, tvíholk-
17. aðan af eiri, ok var brotinn af oddrinn<sup>3</sup>. En er borð váru upp tekin, þá
18. gengr Þorkell bóndi fyri Þorbjörgu, ok spyr hversu henni þikki þar um at lítask,

2. Slógu þá konur hring um hjallinn, en Þorbjörg sat á uppi. Kvað Guð-
3. ríðr þá kvæðit svá fagrt ok vel, at engi þóttisk heyrta hafa með
4. fegri rodd kvæði kveðit, sá er þar var hjá. Spákonan þakkar
5. henni kvæðit, ok kvað: 'Margar þær náttúrur nú til hafa sótt,

12. ríðr, skal ek launa í hǫnd liðsinni þat, er oss hefir af þér staðit, því
13. at þín forlog eru mér nú allglöggæ. Þú munt gjasforð fá hér
14. á Grœnlandi, þat er sœmiligast er, þó at þér verði þat eigi til langæðar,
15. því at vegar þínir liggja út til Íslands, ok man þar koma frá þér
16. bæði mikil ætt ok góð, ok yfir þínum kynkvíslum skína bjar-
17. tari geislar, en ek hafa megin til at geta slíkt vandliga
18. sét; enda far þú nú heil ok vel, dóttir!' Síðan gengu menn at vísinda-
19. konunni, ok frétti þá hverr þess, er mest forvitni var á at vita. Hon
20. var ok góð af frásögnum; gekk þat ok lítt í taum, er hon sagði. Þessu
21. næst var komit eptir henni af oðrum bæ. Fór hon þá þangat.
22. Þá var sent eptir Þorbirni, því at hann vildi eigi heima vera meðan
23. slík hindrvitni var framið. Veðrátta batnaði skjótt, sem Þorbjörg
24. hafði sagt. Býr Þorbjörn skip sitt, ok ferr þar til er hann kemr í Bratta-
25. hlið. Eiríkr tekr vel við honum með blíðu, ok kvað þat vel er hann var þar
26. kominn. Var Þorbjörn með honum um vetrinn, ok skuldalið hans, en þeir
27. vistuðu háseta með bóndum. Eptir um várit gaf Eiríkr Þorbirni
28. land á Stokknesi, ok var þar gerr sœmiligr bær, ok bjó hann þar síðan.
29. Eiríkr átti þá konu, er Þórhildr hét, Af Leif enum heppna ok kristni kom á Grœnland.
30. ok við henni II sonu; hét annarr Þorsteinn, en annarr Leifr. Þeir váru báðir
31. efniligir menn, ok var Þorsteinn heima með foður sínum, ok var eigi sá maðr á Grœn-
32. landi, er jafnmannvænn þótti sem hann. Leifr hafði siglt til Noregs,
33. ok var með Óláfi konungi Tryggvasyni. En er Leifr sigldi af Grœnlandi um sumarit, [HAUKSBÓK, p. 96 l.] ÞORFINNS SAGA KARLSEFNIS.—8.

1. urðu þeir sæhafa til Suðreyja. Þaðan byrjaði þeim seint, ok dvelðusk
2. þeir þar lengi um sumarit. Leifr lagði þokka á konu þá, er Þórgunna
3. hét. Hon var kona ættstór, ok skilði Leifr, at hon mundi vera margkunnig. En
4. er Leifr bjósk brott, beiddisk Þórgunna at fara með honum. Leifr spurði
5. hvárt þat væri nokkut vili frænda hennar. Hon kvezk þat ekki hirða<sup>1</sup>.
6. Leifr kvezk eigi þat kunna sjá at sínu ráði, at góra hertekna svá stór-
7. ættaða konu í ókunnu landi; 'en vér liðfáir.' Þórgunna mælti: 'Eigi er víst,
8. at þér þikki því betr ráðit.' 'Á þat mun ek þó hætta,' sagði Leifr,
9. 'Þá segi ek þér,' sagði Þórgunna, 'at ek man fara kona eigi einsam-
10. an, ok em ek með barni; segi ek þat af þínum völdum. Get ek at
11. þat mun vera sveinbarn, þá er fœðisk. En þóttú vilir óngvan gaum
12. at gefa, þá man ek upp fœða sveininn, ok þér senda til Grœn-
13. lands, þegar fara má með öðrum mönnum. En ek get, at þér ver-
14. ði at þvílíkum nytjum sonareignin, sem nú verðr skilna-
15. ðr okkar til. En koma ætla ek mér til Grœnlands, áðr lýkr.'
16. Leifr gaf henni fingrgull, ok vaðmáls mottul grœnlenzkan
17. ok tannbelti. Þessi sveinn kom til Grœnlands, ok nefndisk Þorgils. Leifr tók
18. við honum at faðerni, ok er þat sumra manna sögn, at þessi Þorgils
19. hafi komit til Íslands fyri Fróðárundr um sumarit. En sjá
20. Þorgils var síðan á Grœnlandi, ok þótti þar enn eigi kynjalaust um
21. hann verða, áðr lauk. Þeir Leifr sigldu brott ór Suðreyjum, ok tóku
22. Noreg um haustit. Fór Leifr til hirðar Óláfs konungs Tryggvasonar. Lagði konungr á hann
23. góða virðing, ok þóttisk sjá, at hann mundi vera vel mentr maðr.
24. Eitt sinn kom konungr at máli við Leif, ok segir: 'Ættlar þú út til Grœ-
25. nlands í sumar?' 'Þat ætla ek,' sagði Leifr, 'ef þat er yðvarr vili.' Konungr svarar:
     'Ek get,
26. at þat mun vel vera, ok skaltu þangat fara með ørindum
27. mínum, ok boða þar kristni.' Leifr kvað hann ráða skyldu, en kvezk
28. hyggja, at þat ørindi mundi torflutt á Grœnlandi. Konungr kvezk eigi þann
29. mann sjá, er betr væri til fallinn en hann, 'ok muntu gíptu til bera.'
30. 'Þat mun því at eins,' segir Leifr, 'ef ek nýt yðvar við.' Lætr Leifr
31. í haf, ok er lengi úti, ok hitti á lund þau, er hann vissi áðr enga ván
32. til. Váru þar hveitiakrar sjálfsánir, ok vfnviðr vaxinn. Þar

1. merki, sum tré svá mikil, at í hús váru lögð. Leifr fann menn
2. á skipflaki, ok flutti heim með sér. Sýndi hann í því hina mestu stór-
3. mensku ok drengskap, sem mǫrgu øðru, er hann kom kristni á landit,
4. ok var jafnan síðan kallaðr Leifr hinu heppni. Leifr tók land
5. í Eiríksfirði, ok fór heim síðan í Brattahlíð; tóku þar allir menn vel
6. við honum. Hann boðaði brátt kristni um landit ok almenniliga trú, ok sý-
7. ndi mǫnnum orðsending Óláfs konungs Tryggvasonar, ok sagði hversu mǫrg ágæti ok mik-
8. il dýrð fylgði þessum síð. Eiríkr tók því máli seint, at láta
9. síð sinn, en Þjóðhildr gekk skjótt undir, ok lét góra kirkju eigi allnær
10. húsunum. Þat hús var kallað Þjóðhildar kirkja. Hafði hon þar fram
11. böenir sínar, ok þeir menn sem við kristni tóku. Þjóðhildr vildi ekki sam-
12. ræði við Eirík, síðan hon tók trú, en honum var þetta mjök móti
13. skapi. Á þessu gǫrðisk orð mikit, at menn mundu leita lands þess,
14. er Leifr hafði fundit. Var þar formaðr at Þorsteinn Eiríks-
15. son, fróðr maðr ok vinsæll. Eiríkr var ok til beðinn, ok trúðu menn hans gæ-
16. fu framast ok forsjá. Hann var lengi fyri, en kvað eigi nei við, er vinir
17. hans báðu hann til, þjoggu síðan skip þat, er Þorbjörn hafði út haft, ok váru
18. til ráðnir XX menn, ok höfðu lítit fé, eigi meira en vápn ok vistir.
19. Þann morgin reið Eiríkr heiman, tók hann einn kistil, ok var þar
20. í gull ok silfr; fal hann þat, ok fór síðan leiðar sinnar, ok bar svá til
21. at hann fell af baki, ok brotna rífin í síðunni, en lesti höndina í ax-
22. larliðnum. Af þeim atburð sagði hann Þórhildi, konu sinni, at hon
23. tæki féit á brott, lézk þess hafa at goldit, er hann hafði féit sólgit.
24. Síðan sigldu þeir út ór Eiríksfirði með gleði mikilli; þótti þeim allvæ-
25. nt sitt efni. Þá velkti úti lengi í hafi, ok kómu þeir ekki á þær sló-
26. ðir, sem þeir vildu. Þeir kómu í sýn við Ísland, ok svá höfðu þeir fugl af
27. Írlandi. Rak þá skip þeira um haf innan. Fóru aptr um haustit, ok váru
28. allmjök væstir ok þrekaðir; koma við vetr sjálfan á Eiríksfjörð.
29. Þá mælti Eiríkr: 'Kátari sigldu vér í sumar út ór firðinum, en nú eru
30. vér, ok eru þó enn mǫrg góð at.' Þorsteinn svarar: 'Þat er nú höfð-
31. ingligt bragð, at sjá nǫkkut gott ráð fyri þeim
32. mǫnnum øllum, sem hér eru nú ráðstafalausir,

4. ok váru þar um vetrinn. Þorsteinn Eiríksson fékk Þuríðar. Aþrgrongur.
5. Nú er frá því at segja, at Þorsteinn Eiríksson vakði bónorð
6. við Guðríði, ok var því máli vel svarat, bæði af henni ok af fǫður
7. hennar. Er þetta at ráði gert. Þorsteinn gengr at eiga Guðríði, ok var
8. þetta brúðkaup í Brattahlíð um haustit. Fór sjá veizla vel fram, ok var
9. allfjölmennt. Þorsteinn átti bú í Vestrbygð, á bœ þeim, er hét í Lýsufirði. En
10. sá maðr átti þar helming í bú, er Þorsteinn hét; Sigríðr hét kona hans.
11. Fór Þorsteinn í Lýsufjörð, um haustit, til nafna síns, ok þau Guðríðr bæði.
12. Var þar við þeim vel tekit. Váru þau þar um vetrinn. Þat gerðisk til
13. tíðinda, at sótt kom í bœ þeira, er lítit var af vetri. Garðr hét þar
14. verkstjóri; hann var ekki vinsæll maðr; hann tók fyrst sótt, ok andaðisk. Síð-
15. an var skamt at bíða, at hverr lézk at öðrun. Þá tók sótt Þorsteinn Eiríks-
16. son, ok Sigríðr, kona Þorsteins, nafna hans; ok eitt kveld fýstisk Sigríðr at
17. ganga til náðahúss, er stóð í gegn útidyrum. Guðríðr fylgði henni,
18. ok horfðu þær móti útidurum. Þá kvað hon við hátt, Sigríðr. Guð-
19. ríðr mælti: 'Vit höfum óvarliga farit, ok áttu øngan<sup>1</sup> stað við at
20. kalt komi á þik, ok fǫru vit heim sem skjótast.' Sigríðr svarar: 'Eigi er foert
21. at svá búnu. Hér er nú liðit þat allt hit dauða fyrri durunum, ok Þor-
22. steinn, bóndi þinn, ok þar kenni ek mik, ok er slíkt hǫrmung at sjá.' Ok
23. er þetta leið af, mælti hon: 'Fǫru vit nú, Guðríðr. Nú sé ek ekki liðit.'
24. Var þá Þorsteinn horfinn henni; þótti hann áðr haft hafa svipu í hendi,
25. ok vilja berja liðit. Síðan gengu þær inn, ok áðr morginn kœmi, þá
26. var hon látin; ok var ger kista at líkinu. Ok þenna sama dag æt-
27. luðu menn at róa, ok leiddi Þorsteinn þá til vara, ok í annan lit fór hann at
28. sjá veiðiskap þeira. Þá sendi Þorsteinn Eiríksson nafna sínum orð, at hann
29. kœmi til hans, ok sagði svá, at þar væri varla kyrt, ok húsfreyja vil-
30. di fœrask á foetr, ok vildi undir klæðin hjá honum, ok er hann kom
31. inn, var hon komin upp á rekkjustokkinn. Þá tók hann
32. hana höndum, ok lagði bolœxi fyrri brjóst
33. henni. Þorsteinn Eiríksson andaðisk

3. nóttina, settisk Þorsteinn Eiríksson upp, ok mælti; kvezk vilja at Guðríför væri
4. þangat kǫlluð, ok kvezk vilja tala við hana: 'Guð vill at þessi stund sé
5. mér gefin til leyfis ok umbótar míns ráðs.' Þorsteinn bóndi gengr á fu-
6. nd Guðríför, ok vakði hana, biðr hana signa sik ok biðja sér guð hjálpar,
7. ok segir hvat Þorsteinn Eiríksson hafði talat við hann; 'ok hann vill finna þik.
8. Verðr þú ráð fyrri at sjá hvat þú vill upp taka, því at ek kann hér
9. um hvárskis at fýsa.' Hon svarar: 'Vera kann, at þetta sé ætlat til nok-
10. kurra þeira hluta, er síðan sé í minni hafðir, þessi hinn undarligi hlu-
11. tr, en ek vænti at guðs gæzla<sup>2</sup> mun yfir mér standa; mun ek
12. ok á hætta með guðs miskunn, at fara til móts við hann, ok vita hvat
13. hann vill tala, því at ek mun eigi forðask mega, ef mér skal mein
14. at verða. Vil ek síðr at hann gangi víðara; en mik grunar, at þat
15. man á liggja.' Nú fór Guðríför, ok hitti Þorstein; sýndisk henni sem
16. hann feldi tár. Hann mælti í eyra henni nokkur orð hljótt, svá at hon
17. ein vissi. En þat mælti hann svá at allir heyrðu, at þeir menn væri
18. sælir, er trúna heldu, ok henni fylgði öll hjálp ok miskunn, ok sagði
19. þó, at margir heldi hana illa; 'er þat engi hátt, sem hér hefir
20. verit á Grœnlandi, síðan kristni kom hér, at setja menn niðr í úví-

23. vil ek brenna láta á báli sem skjótast, því at hann veldr
24. öllum aprtgongum þeim, sem hér hafa verit í vetr.' Hann sagði
25. henni ok um sína lagi, ok kvað hennar forlög mikil mundu ver-
26. ða, en bað hana varask at giptask grœnlenzkum mǫnnum;
27. bað at hon legði fé þeira til kirkju, ok sumt fátœ-

5. henni í fjoður stað. Lítu síðar andaðisk Þorbjörn; þar þá fé allt undir Guðríði.
6. Tók Eiríkr hana til sín, ok sá vel um hennar kost. Af Hǫfða-Þórði.
7. Þórðr hét maðr, er bjó at Hǫfða á Hǫfðaströnd. Hann átti Friðger-
8. ði, dóttur Þóris hímu ok Friðgerðar, dóttur Kjarvals Íra-
9. konungs. Þórðr var son Bjarnar byrðusmjors, Þorvaldssonar hryggs, Ásleiks-
10. sonar, Bjarnarsonar járnstöu, Ragnarssonar loðbrókar. Þau áttu son, er Snorri

16. Grímólfsson, breiðfirzkr<sup>2</sup> at ætt. Annarr hét<sup>3</sup> Þórhallr Gam-

1. Menn þikkjask finna, at þú ert óglaðari en þú átt vana til. Þú hefir

3. slíku góðu, sem vér höfum feng á. Nú segðu hvat úgleði [þinni veldr]. Eiríkr svarar :
4. 'Ér þiggit vel ok góðmannliga. Nú leikr mér þat eigi í hug, at á yðr verði
5. hallt um vár skipti, hitt er heldr, at mér þikki uggligt, þá er þér
6. komit annarsstaðar, at þat flytisk, at þér hafit engi jól verri haft
7. en þessi, er nú koma, ok Eiríkr hinn rauði veitti yðr í Brattahlíð á Græn-
8. landi.' 'Þat mun eigi svá fara, bóndi,' segir Karlsefni, 'vér höfum [á] skipi vá-
9. ru bæði malt ok korn, ok hafit þar af slíkt, er þér vilið, ok górið
10. veizlu svá stórmannliga, sem yðr líkar fyri því.' Þetta þiggr Eiríkr, ok
11. var þá búit til jólaveizlu, ok var hon hin sæmiligsta, svá at menn
12. þóttusk trautt þvílíka rausn sét hafa í fátöeku landi. Ok eptir jól-
13. in vegr Karlsefni bónorð fyrir Eirík um Guðríði, því at honum
14. leizk sem hann mundi foræði á hafa. Eiríkr svarar vel, ok segir, at hon man sínum for-
15. lögum verða at fylgja, ok kvezk góða eina frétt af honum hafa; ok lauk svá, at Þorfinnr festi
16. þuríði, ok var þá aukin veizlan, ok drukkit brullaup þeira, ok var þetta í Brattahlíð um vetrinn.
17. Í Brattahlíð hófusk miklar umræður, at menn skyldu leita Vínlands Hófsk Vínlandsferð.
18. ens góða, ok var sagt, at þangat mundi vera at vitja góðra landskosta. Ok þar kom, at Karlse-
19. fni ok Snorri bjoggu skip sitt, at leita landsins um várit. Með þeim fór ok sá maðr, er Bjarni
20. hét, ok annarr Þórhallr, er fyrr eru nefndir, með sínu skipi. Maðr hét Þorvarðr; hann átti
Frey-
21. dísi, dóttur Eiríks rauða, laungetna. Hann fór ok með þeim, ok Þorvaldr, son Eiríks, ok
Þórhallr,
22. er kallaðr var veiðimaðr. Hann hafði lengi verit með Eiríki, veiðimaðr hans um sumrum, en
23. bryti um veturnum. Hann var mikill maðr, ok sterkr ok svartr ok þursligr, hljóðlyndr ok illorðr, þat er hann
24. mælti, ok eggjaði jafnan Eirík ens verra. Hann var illa kristinn. Honum var víða kunnigt í úbygðum.
25. Hann var á skipi með Þorvarði ok Þorvaldi. Þeir höfðu þat skip, er Þorbjörn hafði út haft.
26. Þeir höfðu alls XL manna ok C, er þeir sigldu til Vestribygðar, ok þaðan til Bjarneyjar.
27. Þaðan sigldu þeir II dægr í suðr. Þá sá þeir land, ok skutu báti ok kǫnnuðu landit, funnu
28. þar hellur stórar, ok margar XII álna víðar; fjölði var þar melrakka. Þeir gáfu
29. þar nafn, ok kǫlluðu Helluland. Þaðan sigldu þeir II dægr, ok brá til landsuðrs ór suðri,
30. ok fundu land skógvaxit, ok mǫrg dýr á. Ey lá þar undan í landsuðr, þar í drápu þeir
31. einn björn, ok kǫlluðu þar síðan Bjarney, en landit Markland. Þaðan sigldu þeir suðr með
32. landinu langa stund, ok kómu at nesi einu, lá landit á stjórni; váru þar strandir langar
33. ok sandar. Þeir reru til lands, ok fundu þar á nesinu kjøl af skipi, ok kǫlluðu þar
34. Kjalarnes. Þeir kǫlluðu ok strandirnar Furðustrandir, því at langt þótti fyr<sup>1</sup> at sigla.

1. Þá górdisk landit vágskorit. Þeir heldu skipunum í einn vág. Óláfr konungr Tryggvason hafði
2. gefit Leif tvá menn skozka, hét maðrinn Haki, en hon Hekja<sup>1</sup>. Þau váru dýrum
3. skjóttari. Þessir menn váru í skipi með Karlsefni; en er þeir höfðu siglt fyrir Furðustrandir, þá lé-
4. tu þeir ena skozku menn á land, ok báðu þau hlaupa suðr á landit, at leita landskosta ok koma
5. aptr áðr III dægr væri liðin. Þau höfðu þat klæði, er þau kølluðu kjafal, þat var svá gørt,
6. at hattr var á upp, ok opit at hliðunum, ok engar ermar á, knept saman milli fóta með
7. knappi ok nezlu, en ber váru þau annarsstaðar. Þeir biðuðu þar þá stund, en er þau kómu ap-
8. tr, hafði annat í hendi vínberja kængul, en annat hveitix nýsát. Gengu þau á skip
9. út, ok sigldu þeir síðan leiðar sinnar. Þeir sigldu inn á fjörð einn; þar lá ein ey fyrir utan;
10. þar um váru straumar miklir; því kølluðu þeir hana Straumey. Svá var mörg aðr í
11. eyinni, at varla mátti ganga fyrir eggjum. Þeir kølluðu þar Straumsfjörð. Þeir báru þar farm af
12. skipum sínum, ok bjoggusk þar um. Þeir höfðu með sér allskonar fénað. Þar var fagrt landsleg. Þeir gá-
13. ðu enkis utan at kanna landit. Þeir váru þar um vetrinn, ok var ekki fyrir unnit um sumarit. Tókusk af
14. veiðarnar, ok górdisk illt til matar. Þá hvarf brott Þórhallr veiðimaðr. Þeir höfðu áðr heitit á
15. guð til matar, ok varð eigi við svá skjótt, sem þeir þóttusk þurfa. Þeir leituðu Þórhalls um III dægr,
16. ok fundu hann á hamargnípu einni. Hann lá þar, ok horfði í lopt upp, ok gapti bæði munnir ok nōsum, ok
17. þulði nokkut. Þeir spurðu hví hann var þar kominn. Hann kvað þá engu þat varða. Þeir báðu hann fara heim
18. með sér, ok hann górdi svá. Lítu síðar kom þar hvalr, ok fóru þeir til, ok skáru, ok kendi engi maðr hvat hvala
19. var, ok er matsveinar suðu, þá átu þeir, ok varð øllum illt af. Þá mælti Þórhallr: 'Drjúgari varð enn
20. rauðskeggjaði nú en Kristr yðarr. Hefir ek þetta nú fyrir skáldskap minn, er ek orta um Þór fulltrúann;
21. sjaldan hefir hann mér brugðizk.' Ok er menn vissu þetta, báru þeir hvalinn allan á kaf,
22. ok skutu sínu máli til guðs. Batnaði þá veðrátta, ok gaf þeim útróðra, ok skorti þá síðan eigi fōng, því at þá var dýraveiðr á landinu, en eggver í eyinni, en fiski ór sjónum. Af Karlsefni
24. Svá er sagt, at Þórhallr vill fara norðr fyrir Furðustrandir, at leita Vínlands, ok Þórhalli.
25. en Karlsefni vill fara suðr fyrir landit. Býsk Þórhallr út undir eyinni, ok verða þeir eigi fleiri saman
26. en IX menn; en allt annat lið fór með Karlsefni. En er Þórhallr bar vatn á skip sitt, ok drakk, þá kvað hann vísu: 'Hafa kváðu mik meistar málmpings, er ek kom hingat, mér samir land fyrir lýðum lasta, drykkinn bazta. Bílds hattar verðr buttu beiðitýr at stýra, heldr er svá at ek krýp at keldu; komat vín á grōn mína.' Ok er þeir váru búnir, undu þeir segl.
30. Þá kvað Þórhallr: 'Fōrum aptr þar er órir eru, sandhimins, landar, látum kenni val kanna knarrar
31. skeið en breiðu; meðan bilstyggvir byggja bellendr, ok hval vella, laufa veðrs, þeir er leyfa lōnd á Furðustrōndum.' Síðan sigldu þeir norðr fyrir Furðustrandir ok Kjalarnes,
33. ok vildu beita vestr fyrir. Þá kom móti þeim vestanveðr, ok rak þá upp á Írlandi, ok váru þeir
34. þar barðir ok þjáðir, ok lét Þórhallr þar líf sitt, eptir því sem kaupmenn hafa sagt. Nú er [at] segja af
35. Karlsefni, at hann fór suðr fyrir landit, ok Snorri ok Bjarni með sínu fólki. Þeir fóru lengi, ok allt þar

2. ok mátti eigi komask í ána utan at háflæðum. Þeir Karlsefni sigldu í ósinn, ok kölluðu í Hópi.
3. Þeir fundu þar á landi sjálfsána hveitiakra, þar sem lægðir
4. váru, en vínvið allt þar sem holta vissi. Hverr lœkr var þar fullr af
5. fiskum. Þeir górdu grafir þar sem mœttisk landit, ok flóðit gekk ofast,
6. ok þá er út fell sjórinn, váru helgir fiskar í gröfunum. Þar var mikill fjöl-
7. ði dýra á skóginum með öllu móti. Þeir váru þar hálfan má-

14. mark, ok tókum skjöld hvítan, ok berum at móti;' ok svá górdu þeir. Þá
15. reru þeir í mót, ok undruðusk<sup>5</sup> þá, sem fyrir váru, ok gengu á land upp. Þeir váru svar-
16. tir menn ok illiligr, ok höfðu illt hár á höfði. Þeir váru mjök eygðir ok breiðir
17. í kinnum. Dvöðusk þeir of stund, ok undruðusk<sup>5</sup> þá, sem fyrir váru, ok reru sí-
18. ðan í brott, ok suðr fyrir nesit. Þeir Karlsefni höfðu górt búðir sínar upp frá
19. vatninu, ok váru sumir skálarnir nær vatninu, en sumir fírr. Nú váru þeir þar þann
20. vetr. Þar kom enginn snjór, ok allt gekk fé þeira sjálfala fram. En er vá-
21. ra tók, sá þeir einn morgin snemma, at fjölði húðkeipa reru sunnan
22. fyrir nesit, svá mart sem kolum væri sáit fyrir hópit; var þá ok veift [á] hverju
23. skipi trján<sup>6</sup>. Þeir Karlsefni brugðu þá skjöldum upp, ok er þeir fundusk, tó-
24. ku þeir kaupstefnu sín<sup>7</sup> á milli, ok vildi þat fólk helzt hafa rautt
25. skrud. Þeir höfðu móti [at] gefa skinnavöru ok algrá skinn. Þeir vildu ok kaupa sverð
26. ok spjót, en þat þönnuðu þeir Karlsefni ok Snorri. Þeir Skrælingar tóku sp-
27. annarlangt rautt skrud fyrir úfölvan belg, ok bundu um höfuð sér. Gekk
28. svá kaupstefna þeira um hrið. Þá tók at fættask skrudit með þeim
29. Karlsefni, ok skáru þeir þá svá smátt í sundr, at eigi var breiðara en þvers
30. fingers, ok gáfu Skrælingar þó jafnmikit fyrir sem áðr eða meira. Þat bar
31. til, at graðungr hljóp ór skógi, er þeir Karlsefni áttu, ok gellr hátt. Þetta fæ-
32. lask Skrælingar, ok hlaupa út á keipana ok reru síðan suðr fyrir landit.
33. Verðr þá ekki vart við þá þrjár vikur í samt. En er sjá stund var liðin,
34. sjá þeir fara sunnan mikinn fjölða Skrælinga skipa, svá sem straumr stœði, var

14. mættið drepa niðr svá sem búfé; ok ef ek hefða vápn, þótti mér sem
15. ek skylda betr berjask, en einhverr yðar!' Þeir gáfu engan gaum hennar<sup>2</sup>
16. orðum. Freydís vildi fylgja þeim, ok varð scinni, því at hon var eigi heil;
17. gekk hon þó eptir þeim í skóginn. En Skrælingar sækja at henni. Hon fann fyrir
18. sér mann dauðan, þar var Þorbrandr Snorrason, ok stóð hellusteinn í hofði
19. honum; sverðit lá bert í hjá honum; tók hon þat upp, ok býsk at verja sik.
20. Þá kómu Skrælingar at henni, en hon dró þá út brjóstit undan klæðunum, ok
21. slettir á beru sverðinu. Við þetta ótask Skrælingar, ok hljópu<sup>1</sup> undan á skip sín,
22. ok reru í brott. Þeir Karlsefni finna [nú] hana<sup>3</sup>, ok lofa kapp hennar. Tveir menn
23. fellu af þeim Karlsefni, en fjölði af þeim Skrælingum. Urðu þeir Karls-
24. efni ofriði bornir, ok fóru nú heim eptir þetta til búða sinna, ok bundu sár sín,
25. ok fhuga hvat fjölmenni þat myndi verit hafa, er at þeim sótti af landi-
26. nu ofan. Sýnisk þeim nú sem þat eina mun liðit verit hafa, er af ski-
27. punum kom, en hitt fólkit man verit hafa sjónhverfingar. Þeir Skrælingar fun-
28. du einn mann dauðan, ok lá øx í hjá. Einn þeira tók upp øxina, ok ljó<sup>4</sup>
29. með tré, ok þá hverr at øðrum, ok þótti þeim vera gørsimi, ok bíta vel<sup>5</sup>; síðan
30. tók einn ok hjó<sup>4</sup> í stein, svá at brotnaði øxin, ok þá þótti þeim engu
31. nýt, er eigi stóðsk grjótit, ok køstuðu<sup>6</sup> niðr. Þeir Karlsefni þóttusk nú
32. sjá, þótt þar væri landskostir góðir, at þar myndi jafnan ótti ok úfriðr
33. á liggja af þeim, er þar bjoggu. Síðan bjoggusk þeir á brott, ok ætluðu til
34. síns lands, ok sigldu norðr fyrir landit, ok funnu V Skrælinga í skinnhjúpum

1. sofnaða nær sjó; þeir höfðu með sér stokka, ok í dýramerg dreyra blandinn. Þót-
2. tusk þeir Karlsefni þat skilja, at þessir menn myndu hafa verit górvir brott af
3. landinu; þeir drápu þá. Síðan fundu þeir Karlsefni nes eitt, ok á fjölða dýra;
4. var nesit at sjá, sem mykiskán væri, af því at dýrin lágu þar um nærtnar.
5. Nú koma þeir Karlsefni aptr í Straumfjörð, ok váru þar fyrir alls gnóttir, þess er þeir
6. þurftu at hafa. Þat er sumra manna sögn, at þau Bjarni ok Guðríð<sup>1</sup> hafi þar
7. eptir verit, ok X tigur manna með þeim, ok hafi eigi farit lengra. En þeir Karlsefni ok Snorri
8. hafi suðr farit, ok XL manna með þeim, en hafi eigi lengr verit í Hópi en vart
9. tvá mánaði, ok hafi sama sumar aptr komit. Karlsefni fór þá einu skipi
10. at leita Þórhalls veiðimanns, en annat liðit var eptir; ok fóru þeir norðr fyrir Kjalarnes,
11. ok berr þá fyrir vestan fram, ok var landit á bakborða þeim. Þar váru þá eyðimerkr einar allt
12. at sjá fyrir þeim, ok nær hvergi rjóðr í. Ok er þeir höfðu lengi farit, fellr á af lan-
13. di ofan ór austri ok í vestr; þeir lögðu inn í árósin, ok lágu við hinn syðra bakkann.
14. Þat var einn morgin, er þeir Karlsefni sá fyrir ofan Víg Þorvalds Eiríkssonar.
15. rjóðrit flekk nokkurn, sem glitraði við þeim, ok æptu þeir á þat; þat hrærdisk,
16. ok var þat Einfœtingr, ok skauzk ofan á þann árbakkann, sem þeir lágu við. Þorvaldr,
17. Eiríks son rauða, sat við stýri, ok skaut Einfœtingr or í smáþarna honum. Þor-
18. valdr dró út orina, ok mælti: 'Feitt er um fstruna, gott land höfum vér fengit
19. kostum, en þó megum vér varla njóta!' Þorvaldr dó af sári þessu líflu síðar.
20. Þá hlcypr Einfœtingr á braut, ok norðr aptr. Þeir Karlsefni fóru eptir honum, ok sá hann
21. stundum. Þat sá þeir síðast til hans, at hann hljóp á vág nokkurn. Þá hurfu þeir Karlsefni
22. aptr. Þá kvað einn maðr kviðling þenna: 'Eltu seggir, allsatt var þat, einn Einfœtingr
23. ofan til strandar; en kynligr maðr kostaði rásar hart um stopir. Heyrðu Karls-
24. efni!' Þeir fóru þá í brott, ok norðr aptr, ok þóttusk sjá Einfœtingaland. Vildu þeir þá
25. eigi hætta liði sínu lengr. Þeir ætluðu öll ein fjöll, þau er í Hópi váru, ok þessi, er nú
26. funnu þeir, ok þat stœðisk mjök svá á, ok væri jafnlangt ór Straumfirði beggja
27. vegna. Hinn þriðja vetr váru þeir í Straumfirði. Gengu menn þá mjök í sveitir, ok
28. varð þeim til um konur, ok vildu þeir, er úkvændir váru, sœkja til í hendr þeim, sem kvæn-
29. dir váru, ok stóð af því hin mesta úró. Þar kom til hit fyrsta haust Snorri,
30. son Karlsefnis, ok var hann þá þrêvetr, er þeir fóru brott. Þá er þeir sigldu af Vínlandi tó-
31. ku þeir suðrœn veðr, ok hiutu þá Markland, ok funnu þar Skrælinga V, ok var einn
32. skeggjaðr, konur váru II, ok börn tvau. Tóku þeir Karlsefni sveinana, en hinir kó-
33. musk undan, ok sukku þeir Skrælingar í jörð niðr. Sveina þessa II höfðu þeir með sér
34. Þeir kendu þeim mál, ok váru skírðir. Þeir nefndu móður sína Vethilldi, ok fœður
35. Uvege. Þeir sögðu at konungar stjórnuðu Skrælingum, ok hét annarr þeira Avalldama,
36. en annarr Avilldudida<sup>2</sup>. Þeir kváðu þar engin hús, lágu menn þar í hellum eða holum.
37. Þeir sögðu þar liggja land oðrum megin gagnvart sfnu landi, er þeir menn byg-
38. ði, er váru í hvítum klæðum, ok báru stangir fyrir sér, ok váru festar við flskar, ok æp-
39. ðu hátt, ok ætla menn, at þat hafi verit Hvíttramannaland eða Írland et mikla.
40. Þá Bjarna Grímólfsson bar í Írlands haf, ok kómu í maðksjó, ok

1. sǫkk drjúgum skipit undir þeim; þeir höfðu bát þann, er bræddr var með seltjǫru, því at þar fær eigi sjónaðkr
2. á. Þeir gengu í bátinn, ok sá þeir þá, at þeim mátti liann eigi ǫllum vinnask. Þá mælti Bjarni: 'Af því at bátrinn tekr
3. eigi meira en helming manna várra, þá er þat mitt ráð, at menn sé hlutaðir í bátinn, því at þetta skal ekki fara at
4. mannvirðingu.' Þetta þótti ǫllum svá drengiliga boðit, at engi vildi móti mæla. Gørðu þeir svá, at [þeir]
5. hlutuðu mennina, ok hlaut Bjarni at fara í bátinn, ok helmingr manna með honum, því at bátrinn tók ekki meira.
6. En er þeir váru komnir í bátinn, þá mælti einn íslenzkr maðr, er þá var í skipinu, ok Bjarna hafði fylgt af
7. Íslandi: 'Ætliar þú, Bjarni, hér at skiljask við mik?' Bjarni svarar: 'Svá verðr nú at vera.' Hann svarar: 'Qðru hézk
8. þú fǫður mínum, þá er ek fór af Íslandi með þér, en skiljask svá við mik, þá er þú sagðir, at eitt sk-

10. fara í skipit, því at ek sé, at þú ert svá fúss til fjørsins.' Gekk Bjarni þá upp í skipit, en þessi maðr í
11. bátinn, ok fóru þeir síðan leiðar sinnar, til þess er þeir kómu til Dyflinnar á Írlandi, ok sögðu þar þessa sögu; en
12. þat er flestra manna ætlan, at Bjarni ok hans kumpánar hafi látizk í maðksjónum, því at ekki spurðisk til þeira
13. Annat sumar eptir fór Karlsefni til Íslands, ok Guðríðr Ættartala frá Karlsefni ok Þuríði, konu hans. síðan<sup>1</sup>.
14. með honum, ok fór heim í Reynisnes. Móður hans þótti sem hann hefði lítt til kostar tekit, ok var Guðr-
15. íðr eigi heima enn fyrsta vetr. En er hon prófaði, at Guðríðr var kvennskǫrungr mikill, fór
16. hon heim, ok váru samfarar þeira góðar. Dóttir Snorra Karlsefnissonar var Hallfríðr, móðir Þorláks biskups
17. Runólfssonar. Þau áttu son, er Þorbjǫrn hét; hans dóttir hét Þórunn, móðir Bjarnar biskups. Þorgeirr hét
18. son Snorra Karlsefnissonar, faðir Yngvildar, móður Brands biskups hins fyrra. Dóttir Snorra, Karlsefnis-
19. sonar var ok Steinunn, er átti Einarr, son Grundar-Ketils, Þorvaldssonar króks, Þórissonar
20. á Espihóli. Þeira son var Þorsteinn ranglát, hann var faðir Guðrúnar, er átti Jǫrundr at Keldum;
21. þeira dóttir var Halla, móðir Flosa, fǫður Valgerðar, móður herra Erlends sterka, fǫður herra Hauks
22. lǫgmanns. Önnur dóttir Flosa var Þórdís, móðir frú Ingigerðar ríku. Hennar dóttir var frú Hallbera, ab-

1. hinn þriðja vetr<sup>1</sup>. Gengu menn þá mjök sleitum; sóttu [þeir] er kvánlausir váru í hendr þeim, er kvángaðir váru. Þar kom til hit fyrsta haust Snorri, son Karlsefnis, ok var þar þann, er þeir fóru á brott; höfðu þeir sunnanveðr<sup>2</sup> ok hittu Markland, ok fundu Skrælinga fimm, var einn skeggjaðr, ok tvær konur, börn tvau. Tóku þeir Karlsefni til sveinanna, en hitt komsk undan, ok sukku í jörð niðr. En sveinana höfðu þeir með sér, ok kendu þeim mál, ok váru skírðir. Þeir nefndu móður sína Vætildi ok Uvægi<sup>3</sup>. Þeir sögðu at konungar stjórnuðu Skrælingalandi. Hét annarr Avalldamon, en annarr hét Valldidida. Þeir kváðu þar engi hús, ok lágu menn í hellum eða holum. Þeir sögðu land þar 9-ðrumegin gagnvart sínu landi, ok gengu menn þar í hvítum klæðum, ok ærðu háit, ok báru stangir, ok fóru með flíkr. Þat ætla menn Hvítamannaland. Nú kómu þeir til Grænlands, ok eru með Eiríki rauða um vetrinn. Þá Bjarna Grímólfsson bar í Grænlandshaf, ok kómu<sup>4</sup> í maðkasjá; fundu þeir ei fyrr en skipit górisk maðksmogit undir<sup>5</sup> þeim. Þá tóluðu þeir um hvert ráð þeir skyldu taka. Þeir höfðu eptirbát þann, er bræddr var seltjoru; þat segja menn, at skelmaðkrinn smjúgi eigi þat tré er seltjorunni er brætt. Var þat flestra manna sögu og tillaga, at skipa mönnum bátinu, svá sem hann tæki upp. En er þat var reynt, þá tók bátrinn eigi meirr upp en helming manna. Bjarni mælti þá, at menn skyldi fara í bátinn, ok skyldi þat fara at hlutföllum, en eigi at mannvirðingum<sup>6</sup>. En hverr þeira manna vildi fara í bátinn, sem þar váru; þá mátti hann eigi við gllum taka. Fyrir því tóku þeir þetta ráð, at hluta menn í bátinn ok af kaupskipinu<sup>7</sup>. Hlutaðisk þar svá til, at Bjarni hlaut at fara í bátinn ok nær helmingr manna með<sup>8</sup> honum. Þá gengu þeir af skipinu, ok í bátinn, er til þess höfðu hlotizk. Þá er menn váru komnir í bátinn, mælti einn ungr maðr íslenzkr, sá er verit hafði fõrunautr Bjarna: ‘Ætlar þú, Bjarni, at skiljask hér við mik?’ Bjarni svarar: ‘Svá verðr nú at vera.’ Hann segir: ‘Svá með því, at þú hézk mér eigi því,
28. þá er ek fór með þér af Íslandi frá búi fõður míns.’ Bjarni segir: ‘Eigi sé ek hér þó annat ráð til; eða svara, hvat leggr þú hér til ráðs.’ Hann segir: ‘Sé ek ráðit til, at vit skiptumsk í rúmunum, ok farir þú hingat en ek mun þangat<sup>9</sup>.’ Bjarni svarar: ‘Svá skal vera. Ok þat sé ek, at þú vinnr gjarna til lífs, ok þikkir mikit fyrir at deyja.’ Skiptusk þeir þá í rúmunum. Gekk þessi maðr í bátinu, en Bjarni<sup>10</sup> upp í skipit; ok er þat sögn manna, at Bjarni létisk þar í maðkahafinu, ok þeir menn, sem í skipinu váru með honum. En bátrinn ok þeir, er þar váru á, fóru leiðar sinnar, til þess er þeir tóku land, ok sögðu þessa sögu síðan. [fór hann heim til<sup>11</sup>
37. Annat sumar eptir fór Karlsefni til Íslands, ok Snorri með honum, ok bús síns í Reynines. Móður hans þótti sem hann hefði i lítt til kostar tekit, ok var hon eigi heim[a] þar hinn fyrsta vetr; ok er hon

1. ríkr hinn rauði, son hans, fóru af Jaðri til Íslands, fyrir víga sakir. Þá var víða
2. bygt Ísland. Þeir bjöggu fyrst at Dröngum á Hornströndum. Þar andaði-
3. sk Þorvaldr. Eiríkr fekk þá Þórhildar, dóttur Jörundar ok Þorbjargar knarrar-
4. bringu, er þá átti Þorbjörn hinn haukdælski. Rézk Eiríkr þá norðan, ok bjó
5. á Eiríksstöðum hjá Vatnshorni. Son Eiríks ok Þórhildar hét Leifr. En
6. eptir víg Eyjúlfs saurs ok Hólmgöngu-Hrafns var Eiríkr górr brott
7. ór Haukadal; fór hann vestr til Breiðafjarðar, ok bjó í Öxney á Eiríksstöðum. Hann lé-
8. ði Þorgesti setstokka, ok náði eigi [þá er] hann kallaði til. Þaðan af górdusk deilur ok
9. bardagar með þeim Þorgesti, sem segir í sögu Eiríks. Styrr Þorgrímsson veitti Eiríki at
10. málum, ok Eyjúlfr ór Svíney ok synir Brands ór Álptafirði, ok Þorbjörn Vífils-
11. son. En Þorgestlingum veittu synir Þórðar gellis ok Þorgeirr ór Hítardal;
12. Eiríkr varð sekr á Þórsnes-þingi. Bjó Eiríkr skip sitt [til] hafs, í Eiríksvági;
13. en er hann var búinn, fylgðu þeir Styrr honum út um eyjar. Eiríkr sagði
14. þeim, at hann ætlaði at leita lands þess, er Gunnbjörn, son Úlfs kráku, sá,
15. er [hann] rak vestr um haf, þá er hann fann Gunnbjarnarsker; kvezk hann ap-
16. tr mundu leita til vina sinna, ef hann myndi landit. Eiríkr sigldi undan Sn-
17. æfellsjökli. Hann fann landit, ok kom utan at því, þar sem hann kallaði Mið-
18. jökul; sá heitir nú Bláserkr. Hann fór þá þaðan suðr með landinu, at
19. leita ef þaðan væri byggjanda landit. Hann var hinn fyrsta vetr í Eiríks-
20. ey, nær miðri hinni eystri byggð; um várit eptir fór hann til Eiríksfjarðar, ok
21. tók sér þar bústað. Hann fór þat sumar í hina vestri úbyggð, ok gaf
22. víða órnefni. Hann var annan vetr í Hólmum við Hrafnsgnúpu. En
23. hit þriðja sumarit fór hann til Íslands, ok kom skipi sínu í Breiðafjörð. Hann
24. kallaði landit, þat er hann hafði fundit, Grœnland, því at hann kvað þat mundu
25. fýsa menn þangat, er landit hétí vel. Eiríkr var á Íslandi um vetrinu; en um
26. sumarit eptir fór hann at byggja landit. Hann bjó í Brattahlíð í Eiríksfirði.
27. Svá segja fróðir menn at á því sama sumri, er Eiríkr rauði fór at by-
28. ggja Grœnland, þá fór hálfir fjórði tógr skipa ór Breiðafirði ok Borgar-
29. firði, en fjórtán kvámusk út þangat; sum rak aptr, en sum tyn-
30. dusk. Þat var XV vetrum fyrr en kristni var lögtekin á Íslandi. Á

 34. al; Helgi Þorbrandsson Álptafjörð; Þorbjörn glóra Siglufjörð; Einarr Einarfjörð;
 35. Hafgrímr Hafgrímsfjörð ok Vatnahverfi; Arnlaugr Arnlaugsfjörð;
 36. en sumir fóru til Vestribygðar. Leifr heppni var skírðr.
 37. Þá er sextán vetr váru liðnir frá því er Eiríkr rauði fór
 38. at byggja Grœnland, þá fór Leifr, son Eiríks, utan af Grœn-
 39. landi til Noregs. Kom hann til Þrándheims um haustit, þá er Óláfr konungur
 40. Tryggvason var kominn norðan af Hálogalandi. Leifr lagði ski-
 41. pi sínu inn til Niðaróss, ok fór þegar á fund Óláfs konungs. Boðaði konungur trú
 42. honum sem öðrum leiðnum mönnum, er á hans fund kómu. Gekk konungi þat au-
 43. ðveldliga við Leif; var hann þá skírðr ok allir skipverjar hans. Var Le-
 44. ifr með konungi um vetriinn vel haldinn. Bjarni leitaði Grœnlands.
 45. Herjúlfr var Bárðarson, Herjúlfssonar; hann var frændi Ingó-
 46. lfs landnámamanns. Þeim Herjúlfi gaf Ingólfr land á mill-
 47. i Vágs ok Reykjaness. Herjúlfr bjó fyrst á Dreptokki; Þorgerðr hét
 48. kona hans, en Bjarni son þeira, ok var hinn efniligsti maðr. Hann
 49. fýstisk utan þegar á unga aldri. Varð honum gott bæði til fjár ok
 50. mannvirðingar, ok var sinn vetr hvárt utan lands eða með fjoðrum sínum. B-
 51. rátt átti Bjarni skip í fjoðrum; ok hinn síðasta vetr, er hann var í Noregi,
 52. þá brá Herjúlfr til Grœnlandsferðar með Eiríki, ok brá búi sínu.
 53. Með Herjúlfi var á skipi suðreyskr maðr kristinn, sá er orti Hafger-

[FLATEYJARBÓK, Column 223.] EIRÍKS ÞÁTTIR RAUDA—4.

1. [var] svarri mikill, en Þorvarðr var lífildmenni. Var hon mjök gefin til fjár.
2. Heiðit var fólk á Grœnlandi í þann tíma. Þat sama sumar kom Bjarni
3. skipi sínu á Eyrar, er faðir hans hafði brott siglt um várit. Þau
4. tíðindi þóttu Bjarna mikil, ok vildi eigi bera af skipi sínu. Þá spur-
5. ðu hásetar hans, hvat er hann bærisk fyrir, en hann svarar, at hann ætlaði at
6. halda siðvenju sinni, ok þiggja at fozður sínum vetrvist; 'ok vil ek h-
7. alda skipinu til Grœnlands, ef þér vilit mér fylgð veita.' Allir kváð-
8. usk hans ráðum fylgja vilja. Þá mælti Bjarni: 'úvitrlig mun þikkja
9. vár ferð, þar sem engi várr hefir komit í Grœnlandshaf.' En þó hal-
10. da þeir nú í haf, þegar þeir váru búnir, ok sigldu þrjá daga, þar til er landit
11. var vatnat; en þá tók af byrina, ok lagði á norrœnur ok þokur,
12. ok vissu þeir eigi hvert at þeir fóru, ok skipti þat mœrgum dœgrum. Eptir þat sá þeir
13. sól<sup>1</sup> ok máttu þá deila ættir; vinda nú segl, ok sigla þetta dœgr
14. áðr þeir sá land, ok rœddu um með sér, hvat landi þetta mun vera. En Bjarni kve-
15. zk hyggja, at þat mundi eigi Grœnland. Þeir spyrja, hvárt hann vill sigla at þessu
16. landi eða eigi; 'Þat er mitt ráð, at sigla í nánd við landit.' Ok svá góra þeir ok
17. sá þat brátt, at landit var ófjöllótt, ok skógi vaxit, ok smár hæðir
18. á landinu, ok létu landit á bakborða, ok létu skaut horfa á land. Síðan
19. sigla þeir tvau dœgr, áðr þeir sá land annat. Þeir spyrja hvárt Bjarni æt-
20. laði þat enn Grœnland. Hann kvazk eigi heldr ætla þetta Grœnland en hit fyrra; 'því
21. at jöklar eru mjök miklir sagðir á Grœnlandi.' Þeir nálguðusk brátt
22. þetta land, ok sá þat vera slétt land ok viði vaxit. Þá tók af byr fyrir þeim. Þá r-
23. œddu hásetar þat, at þeim þótti þat ráð, at taka þat land, en Bjarni vill þat eigi.
24. Þeir þóttusk bæði þurfa við ok vatn. 'At øngu eru þér því óbirgir,'
25. segir Bjarni. En þó fekk hann af því nokkut ámæli af hásetum sínum. Hann bað
26. þá vinda segl, ok svá var gœrt, ok settu framstafn frá landi; ok sigla í
27. haf útsynnings byr þrjú dœgr, ok sá land it þriðja; en þat land var h-
28. átt ok fjöllótt ok jökull á. Þeir spyrja þá, ef Bjarni vildi at landi
29. láta þar; en hann kvazk eigi þat vilja; 'því at mér lízk þetta land ógagnvænligt.'
30. Nú lögðu þeir eigi segl sitt, halda með landinu fram, ok sá, at þat var eyland;

31. settu enn stafn við því landi, ok heldu í haf hinn sama byr; en ve-
32. ðr óx í hǫnd, ok bað Bjarni þá svipta, ok eigi sigla meira en bæði dy-
33. gði vel skipi þeira ok reiða. Sigldu nú fjögur dægr; þá sá þeir land
34. hit fjórða. Þá spurðu þeir Bjarna, hvárt hann ætlaði þetta vera Grœnland eða eigi.
35. Bjarni svarar: 'Þetta er líkast því, er mér er sagt frá Grœnlandi, ok hér munu vér at landi
36. halda.' Svá gœra þeir, ok taka land undir einhverju nesi at kveldi dags,
37. ok var þar bátur á nesinu; en þar bjó Herjúlfur, faðir Bjarna, á því nesi,
38. ok af því hefir nesit nafn tekit, ok er síðan kallat Herjúlfunes. Fór
39. Bjarni nú til fǫður síns, ok hættir nú siglingu, ok er með fǫður sínum
40. meðan Herjúlfur lifði, ok síðan bjó hann þar eptir fǫður sinn.

46. Þat er Hér hefr Grœnlendinga þátt. Capitulum.
 47. nú þessu næst, at Bjarni Herjúlfsson kom utan
 48. af Grœnlandi á fund Eiríks jarls, ok tók jarl við honum vel.
 49. Sagði Bjarni frá ferðum sínum, er hann hafði lond
 50. sét, ok þótti mönnum hann verit hafa úforvitinn, er hann
 51. hafði ekki at segja af þeim londum, ok fekk hann af því nokkut ámæli.
 52. Bjarni góðisk hirðmaðr jarls, ok fór út til Grœnlands um sumarit eptir.
 53. Var nú mikil umrœða um landaleitan. Leifr, son Eiríks rau-
 54. ða ór Brattahlíð, fór á fund Bjarna Herjúlfssonar, ok keypti
 55. skip at honum, ok réð til háseta, svá at þeir váru hálfir fjórði tógr
 56. manna saman. Leifr bað sinn fozur Eirík, at hann mundi enn fyrir vera foz-
 57. inni. Eiríkr talðisk heldr undan; kvezk þá vera hniginn í aldr,
 58. ok kvezk minna mega við vási ǫllu en var. Leifr kveðr hann enn mundu
 59. mestri heill stýra af þeim frændum; ok þetta lét Eiríkr eptir Leifi, ok ríðr h-
 60. eiman, þá er þeir eru at því búinir, ok var þá skamt at fara til skipsins.

[FLATEYJARBÓK, Column 282.] GRÆNLENDINGA ÞÁTTR—7.

1. Drepr hestrinn foeti, sá er Eirfkr reið, ok fell hann af baki, ok lestisk
2. fótr hans. Þá mælti Eirfkr: 'Ekki mun mér ætlat at finna lǫnd fleiri en
3. þetta, er nú byggjum vér; munum vér nú ekki lengr fara allir samt.'
4. Fór Eirfkr heim í Brattahlíð, en Leifr rézk til skips ok félagar hans með
5. honum; hálfir fjórði tǫgr manna. Þar var suðrmaðr einn í ferð, er Tyrker
6. hét. Nú bjoggu þeir skip sitt, ok sigldu í haf, þá [er] þeir váru búnir; ok
7. fundu þá þat land fyrst, er þeir Bjarni fundu síðast. Þar sigla
8. þeir at landi, ok kǫstuðu<sup>1</sup> akkerum, ok skutu báti, ok fóru á land, ok sá þar
9. eigi gras; jǫklar miklir váru allt hit esra, en sem ein hella væri all-
10. t til jǫklanna frá sjónum, ok sýndisk þeim þat land vera gæðalaust.
11. Þá mælti Leifr: 'Eigi er oss nú þat orðit um þetta land sem Bjarna, at vér hafim eigi
12. komit á landit. Nú mun ek gefa nafn landinu, ok kalla Hælluland.'
13. Síðan fóru þeir til skips. Eptir þetta sigla þeir í haf, ok fundu land annat.
14. Sigla enn at landi, ok kasta akkerum; skjóta síðan báti, ok ganga á landit.
15. Þat land var slétt, ok skógi vaxit, ok sandar hvítir víða, þar sem þeir fóru,
16. ok ósæbratt. Þá mælti Leifr: 'Af kostum<sup>2</sup> skal þessu landi nafn gefa<sup>3</sup>, ok kalla
17. Markland.' Fóru síðan ofan aptr til skips sem fljótast. Nú
18. sigla þeir þaðan í haf landnyrðings-veðr, ok váru úti II dægri
19. áðr þeir sá land, ok sigldu at landi, ok kómu at ey einni, er lá norðr
20. af landinu, og gengu þar upp, ok sásk um, í góðu veðri, ok fundu
21. þat at dǫgg var á grasinu ok varð þeim þat fyrir<sup>4</sup>, at þeir tó-
22. ku lǫndum sínum í dǫggina<sup>5</sup>, ok brugðu í munn sér, ok þóttusk ekki jaf-
23. nsœtt kent hafa, sem þat var. Síðan fóru þeir til skips síns, ok sigl-
24. du í sund þat, er lá milli eyjarinnar, ok ness þess, er norðr gekk<sup>6</sup>
25. af landinu; stefnu í vestrætt fyrir nesit. Þar var grunnsævi m-
26. ikit at fjǫru-sjóvar, ok stóð þá uppi skip þeira, ok var þá langt
27. til sjóvar at sjá frá skipinu. En þeim var svá mikil forvitni á, at
28. fara til landsins, at þeir nentu eigi þess at bíða, at sjór felli un-
29. dir skip þeira, ok runnu til lands þar er á ein fell ór vatni einu. En
30. þegar sjór fell undir skip þeira, þá tóku þeir bátinn, ok reru til skip-

31. sins, ok fluttu þat upp í ána, síðan í vatnit, ok kǫstuðu þar akkerum,
 32. ok báru af skipi húðfǫt sín, ok gǫrðu þar búðir; tóku þat ráð síðan
 33. at búask þar um þann vetr, ok gǫrðu þar hús mikil. Hvárki sk-
 34. orti þar lax í ánni né í vatninu, ok stœrra lax en þeir hefði
 35. fyrr sétt. Þar var svá góðr landskostr, at því er þeim sýndisk,
 36. at þar mundi engi fénaðr fóðr þurfa á vetrum. Þar kvá-
 37. mu engi frost á vetrum, ok lítt rénuðu þar grǫs. Meira
 38. var þar jafndægri en á Grœnlandi eða Íslandi: sól hafði þar eyktar-
 39. stað ok dagnálastað um skammdegi. En er þeir hǫfðu lokit hús-
 40. gǫrð sinni, þá mælti Leifr við fǫruneyti sitt: 'Nú vil ek skipta láta liði váru
 41. í II staði, ok vil ek kanna láta landit, ok skal helmingr liðs vera við
 42. skála heima, en annarr helmingr skal kanna landit, ok fara eigi lengra
 43. en þeir komi heim at kveldi, ok skilisk eigi.' Nú gǫrðu þeir svá um stund.
 44. Leifr gǫrði ýmist, at hann fór með þeim eða var heima at skála. Leifr var mik-
 45. ill maðr ok sterkr, manna skǫruligastr at sjá, vitr maðr ok góðr
 46. hófsmaðr um alla hluti. Leifr hinn heppni fann menn í skeri á hafi.
 47. Á einhverju kveldi bar þat til tíðinda, at manns var vant
 48. af liði þeira, ok var þat Tyrker suðrmaðr. Leifr kunni því stórrilla,
 49. því at Tyrker hafði lengi verit með þeim feðgum, ok el-
 50. skat mjök Leif í barncesku. Talði Leifr nú mjök á hendr fǫru-
 51. nautum sínum, ok bjósk til ferðar at leita hans, ok XII menn með honum.
 52. En er þeir váru skamt komnir frá skála, þá gekk Tyrker í mót þeim,
 53. ok var honum vel fagnat. Leifr fann þat brátt, at fóstura hans var ska-
 54. pgott. Hann var brattleitr ok lauseygr, smáskitligr í andliti, lí-
 55. till vexti, ok vesalligr<sup>1</sup>, en sǫrótamaðr á allskonar hagleik. Þá
 56. mælti Leifr til hans: 'Hví vartu svá seinn, fósturi minn, ok fráskili fǫruneytinu?' Hann
 57. talaði þá fyrst lengi á þýzku, ok skaut marga vega augu-
 58. num, ok gretti sik; en þeir skilðu eigi hvat er hann sagði. Hann mælti þá á nor-
 59. rœnu, er stund leið: 'Ek var genginn eigi miklu lengra en þit; kann
 60. ek nokkur nýnæmi at segja. Ek fann vínvið ok vínber.' Mun

1. þat satt, fóstri minn?' kvað Leifr. 'At vísu er þat satt,' kvað hann, 'því at ek var þar
2. fœddr, er hvárki skorti vínvið né vínber.' Nú sváfu þeir af þá
3. nótt; en um morguninn mælti Leifr við háseta sína: 'Nú skal hafa
4. tvennar sýslur fram, ok skal sinn dag hvárt lesa vínber eða
5. hoggva vínvið, ok fella mörkina, svá at þat verði farmr til skips
6. míns.' Ok þetta var ráðs tekit. Svá er sagt, at eptirbátr þeira var f-
7. ylðr af vínberjum. Nú var hoggvinn farmr á skipit; ok er vátar, þá b-
8. joggusk þeir, ok sigldu brott, ok gaf Leifr nafn landinu eptir land-
9. kostum, ok kallaði Vínland. Sigla nú síðan í haf, ok gaf þeim vel byri
10. þar til er þeir sá Grænland, ok fjöll undir jöklum; þá tók einn maðr til máls,
11. ok mælti við Leif: 'Hví stýrir þú svá mjök undir veðr skipinu?' Leifr svarar:
12. 'Ek hygg at stjörn minni, en þó enn at fleira, eða hvat sjái þér til
13. tíðinda?' Þeir kváðusk ekki sjá þat er tíðindum sætti. 'Ek veit eigi,'
14. segir Leifr, 'hvárt ek sé skip eða sker.' Nú sjá þeir, ok kváðu sker vera. Hann
15. sá því frammar en þeir, at hann sá menn í skerinu. 'Nú vil ek, at vér bei-
16. tim undir veðrit,' segir Leifr, 'svá at (vér) náim til þeira, ef menn eru þurflugir
17. at ná várum fundi, ok er nauðsyn á at duga þeim; en með því at
18. þeir sé eigi friðmenn, þá eigum vér allan kost undir oss, en þeir ekki undir
19. sér.' Nú seekja þeir undir skerit, ok lægðu [segl] sitt, koptuðu akkeri, ok sku-
20. tu lítum báti oðrum, er þeir hófðu með sér. Þá spurði Tyrker, hvern
21. þar réði fyrir liði. Sá kvezk Þórir heita, ok vera norrœnn maðr at
22. kyni; 'eða hvert er þitt nafn?' Leifr segir til sín. 'Ertu son Eiríks ra-
23. uða ór Brattahlíð?' segir hann. Leifr kvað svá vera. 'Nú vil ek,' segir Leifr, 'bjóða
24. yðr öllum á mitt skip, ok fémunum þeim, er skipit má við taka.' Þeir þ-
25. águ þann kost, ok sigldu síðan til Eiríksfjarðar með þeim farmi, þar til er
26. þeir kómu til Brattahlíðar. Báru farminn af skipi; síðan bau-
27. ð Leifr Þóri til vistar með sér, ok Guðrði, konu hans, ok III mǫnnum oðrum,
28. en fekk<sup>1</sup> vistir oðrum hásetum, bæði Þóris ok sínum félogum. Leifr tók
29. XV menn ór skerinu. Hann var síðan kallaðr Leifr hinn heppni<sup>2</sup>. Leifi varð n-
30. ú bæði gott til fjár ok mannvirðingar. Þann vetr kom sótt mik-

31. il í lið Þóris, ok andaðisk hann Þórir ok mikill hluti liðs hans. Þann ve-
 32. tr andaðisk ok Eiríkr rauði. Nú var umræða mikil um Vínlands-
 33. fgr Leifs, ok þótti Þorvaldi, bróður hans, of úvíða kannat hafa ver-
 34. it landit. Þá mælti Leifr við Þorvald: 'Þú skalt fara með skip mitt, bróðir, e-
 35. f þú vill til Vínlands, ok vil ek þó, at skipit fari áðr eptir viði
 36. þeim, er Þórir átti í skerinu.' Ok svá var gert. Þorvaldr fór til Vínlands.
 37. Nú bjósk Þorvaldr til þeirar ferðar með XXX manna, með umráði Leifs,
 38. bróður síns. Síðan bjoggu þeir skip sitt, ok heldu í haf ok er
 39. engi frásögn um ferð þeira, fyrr en þeir koma til Vínlands til
 40. Leifsbúða, ok bjoggu þar um skip sitt, ok sátu um kyrt þann vetr, ok
 41. veiddu fiska til matar sér. En um várit mælti Þorvaldr, at þeir skyldu bú-
 42. a skip sitt, ok skyldi eptirbátr skipsins, ok nokkurir menn með, fara fyrir
 43. vestan landit, ok kanna þar um sumarit. Þeim sýndisk landit fagrt ok
 44. skógótt, ok skamt milli skógar ok sjóvar, ok hvítir sandar. Þar var ey-
 45. jótt mjök, ok grunnsævi mikit. Þeir fundu hvergi manna vistir né
 46. dýra, en í eyju einni vestarliga fundu þeir kornhjálml
 47. af tré. Eigi fundu þeir fleiri mannaverk, ok fóru aþr, ok kvámu
 48. til Leifsbúða at hausti. En at sumri öðru fór Þorvaldr fyrir austan með
 49. kaupskipit, ok hit nyrðra fyrir landit. Þá gørði at þeim veðr hva-
 50. sst fyrir andnesi einu, ok rak þá þar upp, ok brutu kjölinn undan ski-
 51. pinu, ok höfðu þar langa dvöl, ok bættu skip sitt. Þá mælti
 52. Þorvaldr við fgrunauta sína: 'Nú vil ek at vér reisim hér upp kjölinn
 53. á nesinu, ok kallim Kjalarnes<sup>1</sup>,' ok svá gørðu þeir. Síðan sigla þeir
 54. þaðan í braut, ok austr fyrir landit, ok inn í fjarðarkjapta þá,
 55. er þar váru næstir, ok at höfða þeim, er þar gekk fram; hann var allr
 56. skógi vaxinn. Þá leggja þeir fram skip sín í lægi, ok skjóta bry-
 57. ggjum á land, ok gengur Þorvaldr þar á land upp með alla fgrunauta sína. Hann
 58. mælti þá: 'Hér er fagrt, ok hér vilda ek bæ minn reisa;' ganga síðan til
 59. skips, ok sjá á sandinum inn frá höfðanum III hæðir, ok fóru til
 60. þangat, ok sjá þar húðkeipa III, ok III menn undir hverjum. Þá skip-

2. með keip sinn. Þeir drepa hina VIII, ok ganga síðan aptr á hófðann,
3. ok sjásk þar um, ok sjá inn í fjörðinn hæðir nökkurar, ok ætluð-
4. u þeir þat vera bygðir. Eptir þat sló á þá hófga svá miklum, at þeir
5. máttu eigi vöku halda, ok sofna þeir allir. Þá kom kallt: 'Vaki þú Þor-
6. valdr ok allt fœruneyti þitt, ef þú vill líf þitt hafa, ok far þú á
7. skip þitt, ok allir menn þínir, ok farið frá landi sem skjótast.' Þá fór
9. innan eptir firðinum útal húðkeipa, ok lögðu at þeim. Þorvaldr mælti þá: 'Vér
10. skulum fœra út á borð vígfleka, ok verjask sem bezt, en vega lítt í
11. mót.' Svá góra þeir, en Skrælingar skutu á þá um stund, en flýja
12. síðan í brott<sup>1</sup> sem ákafast, hverr sem mátti. Þá spurði Þorvaldr menn
13. sína, ef þeir væri nökkut sárir. Þeir kváðusk eigi sárir vera. 'Ek he-
14. fir fengit sár undir hendi,' segir hann, 'ok fló ǫr milli skipborðsins ok
15. skjaldarins undir hönd mér, ok er hér ǫrin; en mun mik þetta til b-
16. ana leiða. Nú ræð ek, at þér búið ferð yðra sem fljótast aptr
17. á leið en<sup>2</sup> þér skulut fœra mik á hófða þann, er mér þótti byggi-
18. ligastr<sup>3</sup> vera; má þat vera, at mér hafi satt á munn komit, at ek muni
19. þar búa á um stund. Þar skulu þér mik grafa, ok setja krossa at hófðum
20. mér ok at fótum, ok kallið þat Krossanes jafnan síðan.' Grænland var þá
21. kristnat, en þó andaðisk Eiríkr rauði fyrir kristni. Nú andaðisk Þor-
22. valdr, en þeir górdðu allt eptir því sem hann hafði mælt, ok fóru síðan, ok hittu
23. þar fœrunauta sína, ok sögðu hvárir ǫðrum slík tíðindi sem vissu, ok bjoggu<sup>4</sup>
24. þar þann vetr, ok fengu sér vínber ok vínvið til skipsins. Nú búask
25. [þeir] þaðan um várit eptir til Grænlands, ok kvámu skipi sínu í Eiríksfjörð
26. ok kunnu Leifi at segja mikil tíðindi. Þorsteinn Eiríksson andaðisk í Vestribygð.
27. Þat hafði górzkt til tíðinda meðan á Grænlandi, at Þorsteinn í Eiríksfirði
28. hafði kvángask, ok fengit Guðríðar Þorbjarnardóttur, er
29. átt hafði Þórir austmaðr, er fyrr var frá sagt. Nú fýstisk
30. Þorsteinn Eiríksson at fara til Vínlands eptir líki Þorvalds, bróður síns, ok

31. bjó skip hit sama, ok valdi hann lið at afli ok vexti, ok hafði með
 32. sér hálfan þriðja tög manna, ok Guðríði konu sína; ok sigla í haf, þe-
 33. gar þau eru búin, ok ór landsýn. Þau velkði úti allt sumarit, ok viss-
 34. u eigi hvar þau fóru; ok er vika var af vetri, þá tóku þeir land í Lýsu-
 35. firði á Grœnlandi, í hinni vestri bygð. Þorsteinn leitaði þeim um vistir, ok
 36. fekk vistir öllum hásetum sínum, en hann var vistlaus, ok kona hans. Nú
 37. váru þau eptir at skipi tvau nokkurar nætr. Þá var enn ung krist-
 38. ni á Grœnlandi. Þat var einn dag, at menn kvámu at tjaldi þeira snemma.
 39. Sá spurði, er fyrir þeim var, hvat manna væri í tjaldinu. Þorsteinn svarar: 'II menn,' segir
 40. hann, 'eða hvern spyrst at?' 'Þorsteinn heiti ek ok er kallaðr Þorsteinn svartr; en þat er
 41. ørindi mitt hingat, at ek vil bjóða ykkur báðum hjónum til vi-
 42. star til mín.' Þorsteinn kvezk vilja hafa umræði konu sinnar, en hon ba-
 43. ð hann ráða, ok nú játar hann þessu. 'Þá mun ek koma eptir ykkur á
 44. morgin með eyki, því at [mik] skortir ekki til at veita ykkur vist, en fá-
 45. sinni er mikit með mér at vera, því at II eru vit þar hjón, því at ek er
 46. einþykkur mjök. Annan sið hefir ek ok en þér hafð, ok ætla ek þann
 47. þó betra, er þér hafð.' Nú kom hann eptir þeim um morgininn með eyki,
 48. ok fóru þau með Þorsteini svarta til vistar, ok veitti hann þeim vel. Guð-
 49. ríðr var skörunlig kona at sjá, ok vitr kona, ok kunnri vel at ver-
 50. a með ókunnum mönnum. Þat var snemma vetrar, sótt kom í lið Þorsteins Eiríkssonar,
 51. ok andaðisk þar margir forunautar [hans]. Þorsteinn bað<sup>1</sup> gøra kistur at líkum þe-
 52. eira, er önduðusk, ok fœra til skips, ok búa þar um; 'því at ek vil
 53. láta flytja til Eiríksfjarðar at sumri, öll líkin.' Nú er þess skamt at bí-
 54. ða, at sótt kemr í hýbýli Þorsteins, ok tók kona hans sótt fyrst, er hét
 55. Grímhildr. Hon var ákafliga mikil, ok sterk sem karlar<sup>2</sup>, en þó kom só-
 56. ttin henni undir; ok brátt eptir þat tók sóttina Þorsteinn Eiríksson, ok lágu þau
 57. bæði senn; ok andaðisk Grímhildr, kona Þorsteins svarta. En er hon var dau-
 58. ð, þá gekk Þorsteinn fram ór stofunni eptir fjöl, at leggja á líkit. Guð-
 59. ríðr mælti þá: 'Vertu lítla hríð í brott, Þorsteinn minn,' segir hon. Hann kvað svá vera
 60. skyldu. Þá mælti Þorsteinn Eiríksson: 'Með undarligum hætti er nú um húsr-

2. num frá stokki, ok þreifar til skúa sinna; ok í því kom Þorsteinn bóndi inn,
3. ok lagðisk Grímhildr niðr í því, ok brakaði þá í hverju tré í stofunni.
4. Nú gærir Þorsteinn kistu at líki Grímhildar, ok færði í brott, ok bjó um. Hann var bæ-
5. ði mikill maðr ok sterkr, ok þurfti hann þess alls, áðr hann kom henni brott<sup>3</sup> af
6. bænum. Nú elnaði sóttin Þorsteini Eiríkssyni, ok andaðisk hann. Guðríðr kon-
7. a hans, kunni því lítt. Þá váru þau ǫll í stofunni. Guðríðr hafði setit
8. á stóli frammi fyrir bekknum, er hann hafði legit [á], Þorsteinn bóndi hennar. Þá tó-
9. k Þorsteinn bóndi Guðríði af stólinum í fang sér, ok settisk í bekkinn ann-
10. an með hana, gegnt líki Þorsteins, ok talði um fyrir henni marga vega, ok huggaði
11. hana, ok lét henni því, at hann mundi fara með henni til Eiríksfjarðar, með líki Þorsteins, bónða hennar,
12. ok fǫrunauta hans; 'ok svá skal ek taka hingat hjón fleiri,' segir hann, 'þér til
13. hugganar ok skemtanar.' Hon þakkaði honum. Þorsteinn Eiríksson settisk þá upp,
14. ok mælti: 'Hvar er Guðríðr?' III tíma mælti hann þetta, en hon þagði. Þá mælti hon við
15. Þorstein bónda: 'Hvárt skal ek svǫr veita hans máli eða eigi?' Hann bað hana eigi
16. svara. Þá gekk Þorsteinn bóndi yfir gólfit, ok settisk á stólinn, en Guðríðr sat í kn-
17. jám honum, ok þá mælti Þorsteinn bóndi: 'Hvat viltu, nafni?' segir hann. Hann svarar, er stún-
18. d leið: 'Mér er annt til þess, at segja Guðríði forlög sín, til þess at
19. hon kunni þá betr andlátu mínu; því at ek er kominn til góðra hvíl-
20. dastaða. En þat er þér at segja, Guðríðr, at þú munt gipt vera islenskum manni,
21. ok munu langar vera samfarar ykkrar, ok mart manna mun frá ykk
22. koma, þroskasamt, bjart ok ágætt, sætt ok ilmat vel. Munu þit
23. fara af Grœnlandi til Noregs, ok þaðan til Íslands, ok góra bú á Íslandi. Þar munu þit le-
24. ngi búa, ok muntu honum lengr lífa. Þú munt utan fara, ok ganga suðr, ok
25. koma út apr til Íslands til bús þíns, ok þá mun þar kirkja reist vera,
26. ok muntu þar vera ok taka nunnuvígslu, ok þar muntu andask.' Ok þá
27. hnígr Þorsteinn apr, ok var búit um lík hans, ok fœrt til skips. Þorsteinn bóndi

28. efndi vel við Guðríði allt þat, er hann hafði heitit. Hann seldi um várit jör-
 29. ð sína ok kvikfé, ok fór til skips með Guðríði, með allt sitt; bjó skipit, ok fekk
 30. menn til, ok fór síðan til Eiríksfjarðar. Váru nú líkin jörðut at kirkju. Guðríðr fór til
 31. Leifs í Brattahlíð, en Þorsteinn svartí gørði bú í Eiríksfirði, ok bjó þar meðan hann
 32. lifði, ok þótti vera hinn vaskasti maðr. Fra Vínlandsferðum Þorfinns ok þeira felögum.
 33. Þat sama sumar kom skip af Noregi til Grönlands. Sá maðr hét Þorfinnr
 34. Karlsefni, er því skipi stýrði. Hann var son Þórðar hesthof-
 35. ða, Snorrasonar, Þórðarsonar frá [Höfða]. Þorfinnr karlsefni var stór-
 36. auðigr at fé, ok var um vetrinn í Brattahlíð með Leifi Eiríkssyni.
 37. Brátt feldi hann hug til Guðríðar, ok bað hennar, en hon veik til Leifs svgrum
 38. fyrir sik. Síðan var hon honum fgrstnuð, ok gørt brúðhlaup þeira á þeim
 39. vetri. Hin sama var umrœða á Vínlandsfgr sem fyrr, ok fý-
 40. stu menn Karlsefni mjök þeirar ferðar, bæði Guðríðr ok aðrir menn. Nú var
 41. ráðin ferð hans, ok réð hann sér skipverja, LX karla ok konur V. Þann mál-
 42. daga gørðu þeir Karlsefni ok hásetar hans, at jofnum höndum skyldi þeir
 43. hafa allt þat, er þeir höfðu fengit<sup>1</sup> til gœða. Þeir höfðu með sér al-
 44. lskonar fénað, því at þeir ætluðu at byggja landit, ef þeir mætti
 45. þat. Karlsefni bað Leif húsa á Vínlandi, en hann kvezk ljá mundu hú-
 46. sin, en gefa eigi. Síðan heldu þeir í haf skipinu, ok kómu til Leifsbú-
 47. ða með heilu ok höldnu, ok báru þar upp húðfgr sin. Þeim bar brátt í
 48. hendr mikil fong ok góð: því at reyðr var þar upp rekin, bæði m-
 49. ikil ok góð; fóru til síðan, ok skáru hvalinn. Skorti þá eigi mat. Fén-
 50. aðr gekk þar á land upp; en þat var brátt at graðfé varð úrigt, ok
 51. gørði mikit um sik. Þeir höfðu haft með sér graðung einn. Karlsefni lét
 52. fella við, ok telgja til skipsins, ok lagði viðinn á bjarg eitt til
 53. þurkanar. Þeir höfðu oll gœði af landkostum þeim, er þar váru, bæði af vín-
 54. berjum ok allskonar veiðum ok gœðum. Eptir þann vetr hinn fyrsta kom su-
 55. mar; þá urðu þeir varir við Skrælingja, ok fór þar ór skógi fram
 56. mikill flokkr manna. Þar var nær nautfé þeira, en graðungr
 57. tók at belja, ok gjalla ákafliga hátt; en þat hræddusk Skrælingar,
 58. ok lögðu undan með byrðar sínar, en þat var grávара ok safa-
 59. li, ok allskonar skinnavara, ok snúa til bæjar Karlsefnis, ok vildu
 60. þar inn í húsin, en Karlsefni lét verja dyrnar. Hvárigir skilðu ann-

1. ars mál. Þá tóku Skrælingjar ofan bagga<sup>1</sup> sína, ok leystu, ok buðu þeim,
2. ok vildu vápn helzt fyrir; en Karlsefni bannaði þeim at selja vápnin, ok nú l-
3. eitar hann ráðs með þeim hætti, at hann bað konur bera út búnyt at þeim, ok þe-
4. gar er þeir sá búnyt, þá vildu þeir kaupa þat, en ekki annat. Nú var s-
5. ú kaupför Skrælingja, at þeir báru sinn varning í brott í mög-
6. um sínum, en Karlsefni ok fõrunautar hans höfðu eptir bagga þeira ok sk-
7. innavõru; fóru þeir við svá búit í brott<sup>2</sup>. Nú er frá því at segja, at
8. Karlsefni lætr gõra skíðgarð ramligan um bæ sinn, ok þjoggusk þar um.
9. Í þann tíma fœddi Guðríðr sveinbarn, kona Karlsefnis, ok hét sá sveinn S-
10. norri. Á öndverðum öðrum vetri kvámu Skrælingjar til móts við þá, ok váru m-
11. iklu fleiri en fyrr, ok höfðu slíkan varnað sem fyrr. Þá mælti Karlsefni við
12. konur: 'Nú skulu þér bera út slíkan mat sem fyrr var rífas-
13. tr, en ekki annat;' ok er þeir sá þat þá koptuðu þeir þoggunum sínum inn
14. yfir skíðgarðinn. En Guðríðr sat í dyrum inni með vöggu Snorra, sonar síns,
15. þá bar skugga í dyrrin, ok gekk þar inn kona í svörtum námkyrtli
16. heldr lág, ok hafði dregil um höfuð, ok ljósjörp á háar, fõlleit<sup>3</sup>
17. ok mjök eygð, svá at eigi hafði jafnmikil augu sét í einum manns-
18. hausi. Hon gekk þar at, er Guðríðr sat, ok mælti: 'Hvat heitir þú?' se-
19. gir hon. 'Ek heiti Guðríðr, eða hvert er þitt heiti?' 'Ek heiti Guðríðr,' segir hon.
20. Þá rétti Guðríðr húsfreyja hönd sína til hennar, at hon sæti hjá henni, en
21. þat bar allt saman, at þá heyrði Guðríðr brest mikinn, ok var þá k-
22. onan horfin, ok í því var ok veginn einn Skrælingja af einum húskarli
23. Karlsefnis, því at hann hafði viljat taka vápn þeira. Ok fóru nú í brott sem
24. tíðast, en klæði þeira lágu þar eptir ok varningr. Engi maðr hafði
25. konu þessa sét utan Guðríðr ein. 'Nú munum vér þurfa til ráða at t-
26. aka,' segir Karlsefni, 'því at ek hygg at þeir muni vitja vár lit þriðja
27. sinni með úfriði ok fjölmenni. Nú skulum vér taka þat ráð, at X menn fari fram
28. á nes þetta, ok sýni sik þar, en annat lið vart skal fara í skóg, ok hö-
29. ggva þar rjóðr fyrir nautfé váru, þá er liðit kemr fram ór skógi-
30. num. Vér skulum ok taka griðung várn, ok láta hann fara fyrir oss.' En þar

31. var svá háttat, er fundr þeira var ætlaðr, at vatn var oðru-
 32. megin, en skógr á annan veg. Nú váru þessi ráð hofð, er Karlsefni l-
 33. agði til. Nú kómu Skrælingjar í þann stað, er Karlsefni hafði ætlat til bar-
 34. daga. Nú var þar bardagi, ok fell fjöldi af liði Skrælingja. Einn
 35. maðr var mikill ok vænn í liði Skrælingja, ok þótti Karlsefni sem hann mundi vera hofð-
 36. ingi þeira. Nú hafði einn þeira Skrælingja tekit upp øxi eina, ok leit
 37. á um stund, ok reiddi at féлага sínum, ok hjó til hans; sá fell þegar
 38. dauðr. Þá tók sá hinn mikli maðr við øxinni, ok leit á um stund,
 39. ok varp henni síðan á sjóinn sem lengst mátti hann; en síðan flýja þeir
 40. á skóginn, svá hverr sem fara mátti, ok lýkr þar nú þeira viðskiptum.
 41. Váru þeir Karlsefni þar þann vetr allan, en at vári þá lýsir Karlsefni, at hann vill eigi þar
 42. vera lengr, ok vill fara til Gröenlands. Nú búa þeir ferð sína, ok hofðu það-
 43. an mǫrg gæði í vínviði ok berjum ok skinnavöru. Nú sigla þeir í ha-
 44. f, ok kvámu til Eiríksfjarðar skipi sínu heilu, ok váru þar um vetrinn. Freydís
 45. Nú teksk umræða at nýju um Vínlandsferð, lét drepa bræðr
 46. því at sú ferð þykkir bæði góð til fjár ok virðingar. Þat sama sumar
 47. kom skip af Noregi til Gröenlands, er Karlsefni kom af Vínlandi. Því skipi st-
 48. ýrðu bræðr II, Helgi ok Finnbogi, ok váru þann vetr á Gröenlandi. Þeir bræðr váru isl-
 49. enzkir at kyni, ok ór Austfjörðum. Þar er nú til at taka, at Fre-
 50. ydís Eiríksdóttir gørði ferð sína heiman ór Gørðum, ok fór til fundar við þá
 51. bræðr Helga ok Finnboga, ok beiddi þá, at þeir fœri til Vínlands með farko-
 52. st sinn, ok hafa helming gæða allra við hana, þeira er þar fengisk. Nú j-
 53. áttu þeir því. Þaðan fór hon á fund Leifs bróður síns, ok [bað], at hann gæfi henni
 54. hús þau, er hann hafði góra látit á Vínlandi. En hann svarar hinu sama, kve-
 55. zk ljá mundu hús, en gefa eigi. Sá var máldagi með þeim Karlsefni ok Fre-
 56. ydís, at hvárir skyldu hafa XXX vígra manna á skipi, ok konur
 57. um fram; en Freydís brá af því þegar, ok hafði V mönnum fleira, ok leyn-
 58. di þeim, ok urðu þeir bræðr eigi fyrri við þá varir, en þeir kómu til Vínlands. Nú
 59. létu þau í haf, ok hofðu til þess mælt áðr, at þau mundi samflo-
 60. ta hafa, ef svá vildi verða, ok þess var lítill munr, en þó kómu þeir bræðr

1. nǫkkuru fyrri, ok hófðu uppborit fong sn til húsa Leifs. En er Fr-
2. eydís kom at landi, þá ryðja þeir skip sitt, ok bera upp til húss fong
3. sn. Þá mælti Freydís: 'Hví báru þér inn hér fong yðr?' 'Því at vér hug-
4. ðum,' segja þeir, 'at haldask muni ǫll ákveðin orð með oss.' 'Mér lóði
5. Leifr húsanna,' segir hon, 'en eigi yðr.' Þá mælti Helgi: 'Þrjóta mun okkr bræðr ill-
6. sku við þik.' Báru nú út fong, ok gǫrðu sér skála, ok settu
7. þann skála firr sjónum á vatnsströndu, ok bjoggu vel um. En Freydís lét
8. fella viðu til skips sn. Nú tók at vetra, ok tǫluðu þeir bræðr,
9. at takask mundu upp leikar, ok væri hófð skemtan. Svá var gǫrt
10. um stund, þar til er menn bárusk verra í milli, ok þá gǫrðisk sundr-
11. þykki með þeim, ok tókusk af leikar, ok ǫngvar gǫrðusk kvámur milli
12. skálanna, ok fór svá fram lengi vetrar. Þat var einn morgin snemma
13. at Freydís stóð upp ór rúmi snu, ok klæddisk, ok fór eigi í skóklæðin;
14. en veðri var svá farit, at dǫgg var fallin mikil. Hon tók kápu
15. bónda sn, ok fór í, en síðan gekk hon til skála<sup>1</sup> þeira
16. bræðra, ok til dyra, en maðr einn hafði út gengit litlu áðr, ok lokit hurð
17. aptr á miðjan klofa. Hon lauk upp hurðinni, ok stóð í gáttum stund
18. þá ok þagði; en Finnbogi lá innstr í skálanum, ok vakði. Hann mælti:
19. 'Hvat viltu hingat, Freydís?' Hon svarar: 'Ek vil at þú standir upp, ok gangir
20. út með mér, ok vil ek tala við þik.' Svá gǫrir hann. Þau ganga at tré, er
21. lá undir skálavegginum, ok settusk<sup>2</sup> þar niðr. 'Hversu líkar þér?' segir hon. Hann svarar:
22. 'Góðr þykki<sup>3</sup> mér landskostur, en illr þykki<sup>3</sup> mér þústr sá, er vár í milli er,
23. því at ek kalla ekki hafa til orðit.' 'Þá segir þú sem er,' segir hon, 'ok svá þ-
24. ikki<sup>3</sup> mér; en þat er ǫrindi<sup>4</sup> mitt á þinn fund, at ek vildi kaupa skipum
25. við ykkur bræðr, því at þit hafit meira skip en ek, ok vilda ek í brott
26. heðan.' 'Þat mun ek láta gangask,' segir hann, 'ef þér líkar þá vel.' Nú skilja þau
27. við þat. Gengr hon heim, en Finnbogi til hvílu sinnar. Hon stígr upp í rúmit kǫldum
28. fótum, ok vaknar hann þorvarðr við, ok spyr hví at hon væri svá kǫld ok vát.
29. Hon svarar með miklum þjósti: 'Ek var gengin,' segir hon, 'til þeira bræðra, at fala sk-

NOTES.

(1) It has been claimed that the Icelandic discovery attained a practical result through the imparting of information to those to whom the discovery of America has been generally ascribed, and notably to Columbus and the Cabots. The tendency to qualify Columbus' fame as the original discoverer dates from the time of Ortelius<sup>1</sup>, while the effort to show that his first voyage was influenced by information which he received from Icelandic sources was, perhaps, first formulated in extenso within the present century<sup>2</sup>. The theory that Columbus obtained definite information from Icelandic channels rests, after all, upon the following vague letter, which is cited by Columbus' son in the biography of his father, as follows:

'In the month of February, of the year 1477, I sailed one hundred leagues beyond the island of Tile, the southern portion of which is seventy-three degrees removed from the equinoctial, and not sixty-three, as some will have it; nor is it situated within the line which includes Ptolemy's west, but is much further to the westward; and to this island, which is as large as England, the English come with their wares, especially those from Bristol. And at the time when I went thither the sea was not frozen, although the tides there are so great that in some places they rose twenty-six fathoms, and fell as much. It is, indeed, the fact that that Tile, of which Ptolemy makes mention, is situated where he describes it, and by the moderns this is called Frislanda<sup>3</sup>.'

<sup>1</sup> "“Christophe Colombe,” dit Ortelius, “a seulement mis le Nouveau-Monde en rapport durable de commerce et d'utilité avec l'Europe.” [Theatr. Orbis terr. éd. 1601, pp. 5 et 6.] Ce jugement est beaucoup trop sévère. D'ailleurs l'opinion du géographe n'était point basée sur l'expédition au Vinland dont il ne fait aucunement mention, peut-être parce que les ouvrages d'Adam de Brème ne furent imprimés qu'en 1579, mais sur les voyages de Nicolo et Antonio Zeni [1388-1404], dont, pour le moins, la localité est restée problématique.' Alex. v. Humboldt, Examen critique, Paris, 1837, vol. ii. p. 120.

<sup>3</sup> I have not been able to find that the original of this letter is in existence. The quotation is made from the Italian edition of the Biography, entitled: *Historie Del. S. D. Fernando Colombo; nelle quali s' ha particolare, & vera relatione della vita, & de' fatti dell' Ammiraglio D. Christoforo Colombo, suo padre, * * nnuouamente di lingua Spagnnola tradotta nell Italiana dal S. Alfonso Vllloa, Venice, 1571.* On page 9 of this book, the letter is thus printed: 'Jo nauigai l' anno MCCCCLXXVII nel mese di Febraio oltra Tile isola cento leghe, la cui parte Australe è lontana dall' Equinoctiale settantatre gradi, & non sessantatre, come alcuni vogliono: ne giace dentro della linea, che include l' Occidente di Tolomeo, ma è molto più Occidentale. Et a quest' isola, che è tanto grande come l' Inghilterra, vanno gl' Inglesi con de loro mercatantie, specialmente quelli di Bristol. Et al tempo, che io vi andai, non era congelato il mare, quantunque vi fossero sì grosse maree, che in alcuni luoghi ascendeua ventisei braccia, et discendeua altre tanti in altezza. È bene il vero, che Tile, quella di cui Tolomeo fa mentione, giace doue egli dice; & questa da' moderni è chiamata Frislanda.'

of the Icelandic discovery through the English, and especially the Bristol trade with Iceland<sup>1</sup>. These theories do not require further consideration here, since they have no bearing on the primitive history of the Wineland discovery.

(2) Lögsögumenn [sing. lögsögumaðr], lit. law-saying men, publishers of the laws. The office was introduced into Iceland contemporaneously with the adoption of the law code of Ulfliot [Úlfliótr], and the establishment of the Althing [Popular Assembly] in the year 930, and was, probably, modelled after a similar Norwegian office. It was the duty of the 'law-sayer' to give judgment in all causes which were submitted to him, according to the common law established by the Althing. The 'law-sayer' appears to have presided at the Althing, where it was his custom to regularly announce the laws. From this last, his most important, function called 'law-saying' [lögsaga], the office received its name. From the time of its adoption, throughout the continuance of the Commonwealth, the office was elective, the incumbent holding office for a limited period [three years] although he was eligible for re-election<sup>2</sup>. [Vigfusson, Dict. s. v., states that during the first hundred years the law-speakers were elected for life.]

(3) Little is known of Rafn beyond his genealogy, which is given in Landnáma, Pt. II, ch. xxi, and again in Sturlunga Saga I, ch. vii [Vigfusson's ed. p. 5]. Rafn was distantly related to Ari Marsson and Leif Ericsson. His ancestor, Steinolf the Short [Steinólfr hinn lági], was the brother of Thorbiorg, Ari Marsson's grandmother, and through the same ancestor, Steinolf, Rafn was remotely connected with Thiodhild, Leif Ericsson's mother.

(4) By this Thorfinn, the second earl of that name, is probably meant, i. e. Thorfinn Sigurd's son. 'He was the most powerful of all the Orkney earls. * * * Thorfinn was five years old when the Scotch king, Malcolm, his maternal grandfather, gave him the title of earl, and he continued earl for seventy years. He died in the latter days of Harold Sigurdsson,' [ca. A.D. 1064]<sup>3</sup>.

(5) It is recorded in Icelandic Annals [Annales regii, Skálholt, Gottskalk's, and Flatey Annals] that King Olaf Tryggvason effected the Christianization of Halogaland in the year 999. In this year, according to the Saga of Olaf Tryggvason in 'Heimskringla,' 'King Olaf came with his men the same autumn to Drontheim, and betook himself to Nidaros, where he established himself for the winter;' and in the same place we read, 'Leif, the son of Eric the Red, he who first settled Greenland, was come that summer from Greenland to Norway; he waited upon King Olaf, accepted Christianity, and spent the winter with King Olaf.' In the spring following, and hence in the spring of the year 1000, for Olaf was killed in the autumn of that year, 'King Olaf sent Leif Ericsson to Greenland to proclaim Christianity there, and he sailed that summer to Greenland. He rescued at sea a ship's crew of men who were in desperate straits, and were clinging to a wreck, and he then found Wineland the Good.' [Heimskringla, ed. Unger, pp. 192, 196, 204.] The preponderance of evidence certainly points to the year 1000 as the year of Leif's discovery.

(6) Húsa-snotro-tré, lit. 'house-neat-wood.' The word húsa-snotra is of infrequent occurrence, and its exact significance has given rise to widely diverging opinions. Saxo Grammaticus renders it 'gubernaculum,' in an excerpt from Arrow-Odd's Saga [Book v, of Historia Danica, ed. P. E. Müller, Copenh. 1839, vol. ii. p. 251]. Torfæus, in his 'Historia Vinlandiæ' [p. 28], renders the word 'coronis;' 'vir quidam Bremensis coronidem ejus [husasnotra habetur] licitabat,' leaving us in doubt as to what he meant by 'coronis;' it may be conjectured, however, that he had in mind the same meaning which was subsequently given to the word by Biorn Haldorsen, in his dictionary, namely, 'coronis domus.' Werlauff [Symbolæ ad geographiam mediæ ævi, ex monumentis Islandicis, p. 14] translated the word, as it occurs in this passage, 'scopæ.' 'Fertur Thorfinnum Karlsefni scopas ex ligno sibi aptasse.' Vigfusson [Dict. s. v.] defines the word, 'house-neat,' 'house-cleaner,' inclining evidently to Werlauff's interpretation, but quoting Finn Magnusen as having suggested the translation 'broom.' Fritzner [Dict. s. v.] defines the word 'a weather-vane, or other ornament, at the point of the gable of a house or upon a ship.' This interpretation of Fritzner's is confirmed by Dr. Valtýr Guðmundsson, in a critical study of the meaning of the word, wherein he shows the close relationship existing between the probable specific names for the parts connected with the ornamented point, occasionally vane-capped, both upon the peak of the house-gable and the peculiarly carved prow of the ship. That the names should have been used interchangeably for the similar object, in both house and ship, is the less remarkable, since we read of a portion of a ship's prow having been removed from a vessel and placed above the principal entrance of a house, that is, in some part of the gable-end of the dwelling<sup>1</sup>.

(7) This passage is somewhat obscure. It may, perhaps, indicate that the 'house-neat-wood' was obtained at Stream-firth, although it is stated in general terms in Flatey Book that the 'house-neat-wood' came from Wineland. If the meaning is, as suggested in this passage, that the 'house-neat' was hewed to the northward of Hóp, the only intelligible interpretation of the following clause would seem to be that, although Karlsefni attained the region which corresponded with Leif's accounts of Wineland, he did not succeed, on account of the hostility of the natives which compelled him to beat a retreat, in accomplishing a thorough exploration of the country, nor was he able to carry back with him any of the products of the land. This author, it will be noted, records only the two voyages described in the Saga of Eric the Red, namely, Leif's voyage of discovery, and Karlsefni's voyage of exploration.

(8) Lit. the Uplanders, i.e. the people of the Norwegian Oplandene; a name given to a district in Norway comprising a part of the eastern inland counties.

(9) Olaf the White is called in the Eyrbyggja Saga 'the greatest warrior-king in the western sea,' [mestr herkonungr fyrir vestan haf]. This expedition, in which he effected the capture of Dublin, appears to have been made about the year 852. [Cf. Munch, Norske

Folks Historie, pt. i. vol. i. p. 441.] The title, which is assigned him, 'herkonungr,' signifies a king of troops, a warrior-king. Norway, prior to the reign of Harold Fairhair, was divided into numerous petty states, called 'fylki.' The rulers of these small kingdoms were called 'fylkiskonungar' [fylki-kings], as contradistinguished from those 'kings' who had command over a troop of warriors or a war-ship, but who were not necessarily rulers of the land. These warrior-kings were called 'herkonungar,' or occasionally 'sjókonungar [sea-kings]. [Cf. Keyser, Norges Stats- og Retsforfatning i Middelalderen, in his 'Efterladte Skrifter,' Chr'a, 1867, vol. ii. p. 20 et seq.] As the forays of these 'warrior-kings' were mainly directed against the people living in and about the British Isles, and hence to the westward of Norway, the expression, 'at herja í vestríking,' 'to engage in a westerly foray,' came to be a general term for a viking descent upon some part of the coast of Great Britain, Ireland, or the adjacent islands. These free-booting expeditions began on the Irish coasts, perhaps as early as 795. In 798, the Norsemen plundered the Hebrides, and in 807 obtained a lodgment upon the mainland of Ireland<sup>1</sup>.

(10) Aud, or as she is also called Unnr, [cf. ante, note 4, p. 15], the Enormously-wealthy [hin djúpauðga] or Deep-minded [hin djúpuðga], was one of the most famous of the Icelandic colonists. Her genealogy is thus given in the first chapter of the Laxdæla Saga: 'There was a man named Ketil Flat-nose, a son of Biorn Buna; he was a mighty chieftain in Norway, and a man of noble lineage; he dwelt at Romsdal in the Romsdal-fylki, which is between South Mær and North Mær. Ketil Flat-nose married Ingvild, daughter of Ketil Wether, a famous man; they had five children. . . . Umm, the Enormously-wealthy, was Ketil's daughter, [she] who married Olaf the White, Ingiald's son, son of Frodi the Brave, who slew the Swertlings.' Aud was one of the few colonists who had accepted the Christian religion before their arrival in Iceland. Her relatives, however, seem to have lapsed into the old faith soon after her death, for on the same hill on which Aud had erected her cross, they built a heathen altar, and offered sacrifices, believing that, after death, they would pass into the hill. [Landnáma, Pt. ii. ch. xvi.] Earl Sigurd the Mighty, with whom Aud's son, Thorstein, formed his alliance, was the first earl of the Orkneys, and this league was formed ca. 880. [Orkneyinga Saga, ed. Vigfusson, l. c. p. 5.] Vigfusson makes the date of Thorstein the Red's fall, ca. 888, of Aud's arrival in Iceland, ca. 892, and of her death, ca. 908-10. [Tímatil l. c., p. 494]; Munch, on the other hand, gives the date of Aud's death as 900. [Norske Historie, pt i. p. 802.]

(11) Suðreyjar [Sodor], lit. the southern islands; a name applied specifically, as here, to the Hebrides.

(12) Knørr, a kind of trading-ship. It was in model, doubtless, somewhat similar to the modern Nordlands-jægter, the typical sailing craft of northern Norway. It was, probably, a clinker-built ship, pointed at both ends, half-decked, [fore ?] and aft, and these half-decks were in the larger vessels connected by a gangway along the gunwale. The open space between the decks was reserved for the storage of the cargo, which, when the ship was laden, was protected by skins or some similar substitute for tarpaulins. The vessel was provided with a single mast, and was propelled by a rude square sail, and was also supplied with oars. The rudder was attached to the side of the ship, upon the starboard quarter, and the anchor, originally of stone, was afterward supplanted by one of iron, somewhat similar in form to those now in use. When the vessel was in harbour a tent was spread over the ship at both ends. The vessel was supplied with a large boat, called the 'after-boat,' sometimes large enough to hold twenty persons [Egils Saga Skallagrímssonar, ch. 27], which was frequently towed behind the ship; in addition to this, a smaller boat often appears to have been carried upon the ship. [Cf. Egils Saga Skallagrímssonar, ch. 60, wherein we are told that three men enter the smaller boat, but eighteen the 'after-boat']. The knørr was swift and more easily controlled than the long-ship [langskip] or war-ship, as we may conclude from a passage in the Saga of Olaf Tryggvason, ch. 184, wherein Earl Hacon tells Sigmund Brestisson, when the latter is preparing to sail to the Færoes, to take vengeance for his father, 'the voyage is not so long as it is difficult, for long-ships cannot go thither on account of the storms and currents, which are oftentimes so severe there, that a merchant-ship [byrðingr] can scarcely cope with these, [wherefore] it seems to me best, that I should cause two "knerrir" to be equipped for your voyage.' Upon Queen Aud's vessel there were twenty freemen, and besides these there were probably as many more women and children, perhaps forty or fifty persons in all. As Aud was going to a new country to make it her permanent home, she took with her, no doubt, a considerable cargo of household utensils, timber, grain, live-stock, &c. In the Egils Saga mention is made of two vessels (knerrir, sing. knørr), presumably of about the same size as this 'knørr,' in which Aud and her people made the voyage to Iceland. We read there, that after the death of Thorolf Kveldulfsson, who received his death-wound from Harold Fairhair's own hand, because of his refusal to pay tribute to the king, that Kveldulf, Thorolf's father and Skallagrim, his brother, decided to go to Iceland. 'Early in the spring [878], Kveldulf and his son each made his ship ready. They had a considerable ship's company, and a goodly one. They made ready two large "knerrir," having upon each thirty able-bodied men, besides women and young persons. They took with them all of the property which they could.' [Egils Saga Skallagrímssonar, ed. Finnur Jónsson, Copenh. 1886, p. 81.] A recent writer, Tuxen, reasoning from this passage, concludes, that there could not have been less than forty persons on board each ship, there may well have been more, and to transport these, together with their probable cargo, would, he estimates, require a sloop of not less than forty tons burden, which would belong to the smallest class of vessels now making the voyage between Copenhagen and Iceland. Reasoning from a comparison of a vessel of this size with the ship unearthed at the farm of Gokstad, north of Sandefjord, Norway, in 1880, he concludes, that such a 'knørr' would have been somewhat over forty-two feet long, with a breadth of beam of from sixteen to eighteen feet, that is to say rather more than twenty feet shorter than the Gokstad ship, with about the same breadth of beam, but probably considerably deeper from gunwale to keel. It is not clear, however, why so small a size should be assigned to the 'knørr;' there seems excellent reason for the conclusion that these vessels were not only as large, but even decidedly larger, than the Gokstad ship. Sailing free, before the wind, these ships could doubtless attain a very creditable rate of speed, but the nature of the sail and its adjustment was apparently such that they could not make such favourable progress when beating into the wind, especially in land-locked waters, and hence the frequent recurrence in the sagas of the statement, that 'the ship waited for a fair wind' [byrr], before setting sail. It was, probably, in ships of a similar model to that of the 'knorr,' that Leif and Karlsefni made their voyages. These vessels, while they seem to have been constructed with little regard to the comfort of their crews, were well adapted to fulfill their duties in the more essential features of seaworthiness and speed<sup>1</sup>.

(13) Frjals, a freedman, from fri-háls, i.e. having the neck free; a ring worn about the neck having been a badge of servitude. Slaves were called þrælar, thralls. The thrall was entirely under the control of his master, and could only obtain his freedom by purchase, with the master's approval. He was occasionally freed by his lord, as a reward for some especial act of devotion, for a long period of faithful service, or, in Christian times, as an act of atonement or propitiation on the part of the master. The early settlers of Iceland brought with them many of their thralls from Norway; others were captured in the westerly forays, or purchased in the British Isles,—indeed the ranks of the slaves would appear, both from actual record and from their names, to have been mainly recruited from the British Isles. The majority of these were, probably, not serfs by birth, but by conquest, as witness the case of Vifil in this saga. The freeing of thralls was very common in Iceland, and there are frequent references in the sagas to men who were themselves, or whose fathers had been, 'leysingjar,' freedmen. The master could kill his own thrall without punishment; if he killed the slave of another he was required to pay to the master the value of the slave, within three days, or he laid himself liable to condemnation to the lesser outlawry. The thralls were severely punished for their misdeeds, but if one man took into his own hands the punishment of the thralls of another, it was held to be an affront which could be, and usually was, promptly revenged by their master. It was this right of revenge for such an affront, which led Eric the Red to kill Eyiolf Saur, who had punished Eric's thralls for a crime committed against Eyiolf's kinsman, Valthiof. The master, however, was made liable for the misdeeds of his thrall, and could be prosecuted for these; the offence in Eyiolf's case was, that he took the execution of the law into his own hands<sup>2</sup>.

(14) Dalalönd, lit. the Dale-lands. The region of which Aud took possession is in the western part of Iceland, contiguous to that arm of the Breidafirth [Broad-firth] which is known as Hvamms-firth. Hvammr is on the northern side of this firth at its head, and Krosshólar [Cross-hill] is hard by. Both Hvammr and Krosshólar still retain their ancient names.

(15) Vifilsdalr [Vifilsdale] unites with Laugardalr to form the Hörðadalr, through which the Hörda-dale river flows from the south into Hvamms-firth, at the south-eastern bight of that firth.

(16) Jæderen was a district in south-western Norway, in which the modern Stavanger is situated.

(17) Drangar on Horn-strands, where Eric and his father first established themselves, is on the northern shore of the north-west peninsula of Iceland. Eric's stead, to which Eric removed after his father's death and his own marriage to Thorhild, was in Haukadale, in western Iceland, in Queen Aud's 'claim;' through this valley the Haukadale river flows, from the east, into the south-easterly bight of Hvamms-firth.

(18) Brokey [Brok-island, which receives its name from a kind of grass called 'brok'] is the largest of the numerous islands at the mouth of Hvamms-firth, where it opens into Breida-firth. Eyxney, Öxney [Ox-island] is separated from Brokey by a narrow strait. Suðrey [South-island] is in the same archipelago, immediately south of Brokey. It is said that the first dwelling upon Brokey was built in the last half of the seventeenth century. Suðrey is no longer inhabited; the present dwelling on Öxney is situated on the southern side of the island, while Eric's home, it is claimed, was upon the northern side of the island, at the head of a small bay or creek, called Eiríksvágr, and it is stated that low mounds can still be seen on both Öxney and Suðrey, which are supposed to indicate the sites of Eric's dwellings<sup>1</sup>.

(19) In the skáli, which was, perhaps, at the time of which this saga treats, used as a sleeping-room, there was a raised daís or platform, called the 'set,' on either side of what may be called the nave of the apartment, extending about two-thirds the length of the room. This 'set' was used, as a sleeping-place by night, and the planks or timbers with which the 'set' was covered were called 'set-stokkar,' although this name seems to have been especially applied to those timbers, which formed the outer portion of the 'set'<sup>2</sup>.

(20) Drangar [Monoliths] and Breiðabólstaðr [Broad-homestead] were both situated on the mainland, a short distance to the southward of the islands on which Eric had established himself.

(21) One of the famous 'settlers' of Iceland, named Thorolf Moster-beard [Mostrarskegg]; like many another 'settler' [landnámsmaðr], because he would not acknowledge the supremacy of king Harold Fairhair, left his home in the island of Moster, in south-western Norway, and sailed to Iceland, where he arrived about the year 884 [Vigfusson, Tímatal, l. e. p. 493]. He was a believer in the 'old' or heathen faith, and when he reached the land, he cast the pillars of the 'place of honour' of his Norwegian home into the sea; upon these the figure of the god Thor was carved, and where these penates were cast up by the sea, according to the custom of men of his belief, he established himself. The cape upon which the wooden image of the god drifted, Thorolf called Thorsness. This cape is on the southern side of Breidafirth, at the mouth of Hvamms-firth, and here Thorolf subsequently established a district court [héraðsþing] which received from his 'claim' the name of 'Thorsness-thing.' The exact site of this 'thing' is somewhat uncertain. Vigfusson [Eyrbyggja Saga, Vorrede, p. xix] suggests that it was, probably, somewhat to the westward of the mouth of Hvamms-firth. When the 'Quarter-courts' were established in the tenth century, Thorsness-thing was removed farther to the eastward [Eyrbyggja Saga, ed. Vigfusson, p. 12]—and there have been those, who claim to have been able to discover the truc site of this ancient court. [Cf. Finn Magnusen, Grönlands historiske Mindesmærker, vol. i. pp. 520 et seq.; Thorlacius, Um Örnefni í Þórnes þingi, l. c. pp. 294-5.] Vigfusson says of Magnusen's supposed discovery, that it had in it more of 'poetry than truth' ['ist mehr Dichtung als Wahrheit'], and this opinion seems to be entirely confirmed by Dr. Kålund. [Cf. Vigfusson, Eyrbyggja Saga, Vorrede, p. xix; Kålund, Bidr. til en hist.-top. Beskr. af Island, vol. i. p. 443.] It was at this court that Eric the Red, despite the assistance which he received from his friends, was condemned to outlawry.

(22) Dímunarvágr [Dimun-inlet] was, probably, in that group of small islets called Dímun, situated north-east of Brokey at the mouth of Hvamms-firth.

(23) Very little information has been preserved concerning Gunnbiorn, or his discovery. His brother, Grimkell, was one of the early Icelandic colonists, and settled on the western coast of Snowfells-ness, his home being at Saxahóll. [Landnáma, pt. ii. ch. viii.] Gunnbiorn's sons, Gunnstein and Halldor, settled in the North-west peninsula, on arms of the outer Ice-firth [Ísafjarðardjúp] [Landnáma, pt. ii. ch. xxix]. It is not known whether Gunnbiorn ever lived in Iceland, but it would seem to be probable that it was upon a voyage to western Iceland, that he was driven westward across the sea between Iceland and Greenland, and discovered the islands, which received his name, and likewise saw the Greenland coast. Eric sailed westward from Snowfells-ness, the same cape upon which Gunnbiorn's brother had established himself, and it is, perhaps, not unlikely, that it was from somewhere in the region of Grimkell's 'claim' that Gunnbiorn was driven westward, and that the knowledge of this may have guided Eric in laying his course.

(24) Blacksark [Bláserkr] and Whitesark [Hvítserkr] may have been either on the eastern or the south-eastern coast of Greenland. It is not possible to determine from the description here given, whether Blacksark was directly west of Snæfellsjökull, nor is it clear whether Blacksark and Whitesark are the same mountain, or whether there has been a clerical error in one or the other of the manuscripts.

(25) An effort was made by the editors of 'Grönlands historiske Mindesmærker,' to determine the actual site of the different firths, islands and mountains here named. In the light of subsequent explorations, it may be said, this effort was crowned with rather dubious success. So much seems to be tolerably certain, from Captain Gustav Holm's explorations of the eastern coast of Greenland, accomplished in 1883-5, that there were no Icelandic settlements upon that coast; wherefore both the Eastern and Western Settlement must be sought upon the western coast of Greenland, that is, to the westward of Cape Farewell, and between that cape on the south and Disco Island on the north; for, according to Steenstrup, the only ruin in northern Greenland, not of Eskimo origin, of which we have any knowledge, is the so-called 'Bear-trap' on Nugsuak Cape<sup>1</sup>, on the mainland, a short distance north of Disco Island. [Steenstrup, 'Undersøgelsesrejserne i nord-Grønland i Aarene 1878-80,' in Meddelelser om Grønland, Copenh. 1883, p. 51.] The principal Norse remains [i.e. remains from the Icelandic colony in Greenland] have been found in two considerable groups; one of these is in the vicinity of the modern Godthaab, and the other in the region about the modern Julianehaab [the famous Kakortok church ruin being in the latter group]. It may be, that the first or Godthaab ruins, are upon the site of the Western Settlement, and the second, or Julianehaab group, upon that of the Eastern Settlement. It is not apparent, however, whether the Western uninhabited region was between Godthaab and Julianehaab or beyond Godthaab to the north, but it seems clear, that Eric's-firth, Hrafn's-firth, Snowfell, Hvarfsgnipa, and Ericsey, were all situated upon the western coast of Greenland<sup>1</sup>.

(26) This Ingolf was called Ingolf the Strong [hinn sterki]. There is some confusion in Landnáma concerning his genealogy; he was probably a son of one of the Icelandic colonists, named Thorolf Sparrow [spørr]. His home, Hólmslátr [Holm-litter], was on the southern side of Hvamms-firth.

(27) Thorbiorn's and Thorgeir's father was the same Vifil, who came out to Iceland with Queen Aud, and who received from her the land on which he settled, Vifilsdale, as has been narrated in this saga, and is thus told in Landnáma: 'Vifil was the name of a freedman of Aud's. . . She gave him Vifilsdale, where he dwelt. . . His son was Thorbiorn, father of Gudrid, who married Thorstein, the son of Eric the Red, and afterwards Thorfinn Karlsefni, from whom are descended Bishops Biorn, Thorlak, and Brand. Another son of Vifil's was Thorgeir, who married Arnora,' &c. [Landnáma, pt. ii. ch. xvii.] The estate which Thorbiorn received with his wife, and upon which he lived after his marriage, called Laugarbrekka [Warm-spring-slope] on Hellisvellir [Cave-fields], is situated on the southern side of Snowfells-ness, near the outer end of that cape. Arnarstapi [Eagle-crag], where Gudrid's foster-father lived, was a short distance to the north-east of Laugarbrekka.

(28) Thorgeir'sfell was upon the southern side of Snowfells-ness, to the eastward of Arnarstapi.

(29) The simple fact, that Thorgeir was a freedman, would seem to have offered no valid reason for Thorbiorn's refusal to consider his son's offer for Gudrid's hand, since Thorbiorn was himself the son of a man who had been a thrall; the real ground for his objection was, perhaps, not so much the former thralldom of Einar's father, as the fact that he was a man of humble birth, which Thorbiorn's father, although a slave, evidently was not.

(30) Hraunhöfn [Lava-haven] was on the southern side of Snowfells-ness, nearly midway between Laugarbrekka and Thorgeir'sfell. It was this harbour from which Biorn Broadwickers'-champion set sail, as narrated in Eyrbyggja<sup>2</sup>.

(31) Lítill-vølvá. The word vølvá signifies a prophetess, pythoness, sibyl, a woman gifted with the power of divination. The characterization of the prophetess, the minute description of her dress, the various articles of which would seem to have had a symbolic meaning, and the account of the manner of working the spell, whereby she was enabled to forecast future events, form one of the most complete pictures of a heathen ceremony which has been preserved in the sagas.

(32) The expression 'Leif had sailed' ['Leifr hafði siglt'], would seem to refer to an antecedent condition, possibly to the statement concerning the arrival of Thorbiorn and his daughter at Brattahlid; i.e. 'Leif had sailed,' when they arrived. If this be, indeed, the fact, it follows that Thorbiorn and his daughter must have arrived at Brattahlid during Leif's absence in Norway, and obviously before his return to Greenland, in the autumn of the year 1000. Upon this hypothesis, it is clear, that Thorbiorn and Gudrid must have been converted to Christianity before its legal acceptance in Iceland, that is to say, before the year 1000; and further, that Thorstein Ericsson may have been married to Gudrid in the autumn after his return from his unsuccessful voyage, namely, in the autumn of the year 1001; accordingly Karlsefni may have arrived in the following year, have been wedded to Gudrid at the next Yule-tide, 1002-3, and have undertaken his voyage to Wineland in the year 1003. This chronology is suggested with the sole aim of fixing the earliest possible date for Karlsefni's voyage of exploration.

<sup>1</sup> An account of the explorations of the ruins in the vicinity of Godthaab will be found in Meddelelser om Grønland, Copenhagen, 1889, in Jensen's article entitled, 'Undersøgelse af Grønlands Vestkyst [1884-85] fra 64° til 67° N.' For a description of the ruins in the neighbourhood of Julianehaab, cf. Holm, 'Beskrivelse af Ruiner i Julianehaabs Distrikt, undersøgte i Aaret 1880,' in Meddelelser om Grønland, Copenh. 1883.

(33) The expression of PsK. 'margkunnig,' conveys the impression that Thorgunna was gifted with preternatural wisdom.

(34) It has been suggested, that this Thorgunna is the same woman of whom we read in the Eyrbyggja Saga: "That summer, when Christianity was accepted by law in Iceland, a ship arrived out by Snowfells-ness; this was a Dublin ship . . . There was a woman of the Hebrides on board, whose name was Thorgunna; the ship's folk reported, that she had brought with her such precious articles as were very rare in Iceland. And when Thurid, the mistress of Fródá, heard this, she was very curious to see these treasures; for she was fond of finery, and showy in her dress; she accordingly went to the ship, where she met Thorgunna, and enquired of her whether she had any woman's garb of surpassing beauty. She replied, that she had no precious things to sell, but that she had finery in which she felt it no disgrace to appear at feasts or other assemblies. Thurid asked to see these articles, and was well pleased with them, and thought them very becoming, but not of very great value. Thurid endeavoured to purchase these articles, but Thorgunna would not sell them. Thereupon Thurid invited her to make her home with her, for she knew that Thorgunna had many treasures, and she thought that, sooner or later, she might succeed in obtaining them. Thorgunna replies: "I am well content to make my home with thee, but thou shalt know that I am inclined to give but little for my maintenance, since I am well able to work; wherefore I will myself decide what I shall give for my support from such property as I possess." Thorgunna spoke about the matter somewhat harshly, but Thurid still insisted that she should accompany her. Thorgunna's belongings were then carried from the ship; they were contained in a large locked chest and a portable box; these were carried to Fródá, and when Thorgunna came to her lodgings, she asked to be provided with a bed, and a place was assigned her in the innermost part of the sleeping-apartment. She then unlocked her chest, and took from it bed-clothes, which were all very elaborately wrought; she spread an English sheet and silk quilt over the bed; she took bed-curtains from the chest together with all the precious hangings of a bed; all of these were so fine that the folk thought they had never seen the like. Thereupon Mistress Thurid exclaimed: "Fix a price upon the bed-clothing." Thorgunna replies: "I shall not lie in straw for thee, even if thou art fine-mannered and carriest thyself proudly." Thurid was displeased at this, and did not again seek to obtain the precious articles. Thorgunna worked at weaving every day, when there was no hay-making; but when the weather was dry, she worked at hay-making in the in-fields, and she had a rake made especially for her, and would use no other. Thorgunna was a large woman, tall, and very stout; with dark brown eyes set close together, and thick brown hair; she was for the most part pleasant in her bearing, attended church every morning before she went to her work, but was not, as a rule, easy of approach nor inclined to be talkative. It was the common opinion that Thorgunna must be in the sixties.' [Eyrbyggja Saga, ed. Vigfusson, pp. 92-3.] In the autumn after her arrival Thorgunna died, and the strange events accompanying her last illness, are recorded in the chapter following that above quoted. As she approached her end, she called the master of the house to her, and said: "It is my last wish, if I die from this illness, that my body be conveyed to Skálholt, for I foresee that it is destined to be one of the most famous spots in this land, and I know that there must be priests there now to chant my funeral service. I would, therefore, request thee to have my body conveyed thither, for which thou shalt have suitable compensation from my possessions; while of my undivided property Thurid shall receive the scarlet cloak, and I thus direct, that she may be content, if I make such disposition of my other property as I see fit; moreover, I would have thee requite thyself for such expense as thou hast incurred in my behalf, with such articles as thou wishest, or she may choose, of that which I so appoint. I have a gold ring, which is to go with my body to the church, but my bed and hangings I wish to have burned, for these will not be of profit to any one; and this I say, not because I would deprive any one of the use of these things, if I believed that they would be useful; but I dwell so particularly upon this," says she, "because I should regret, that so great affliction should be visited upon any one, as I know must be, if my wishes should not be fulfilled." [Eyrbyggja Saga, l. c. pp. 95-6.]

The age here assigned to Thorgunna hardly agrees with the probable age of the Hebridean Thorgunna of Leif's acquaintance. Indeed the description of this remarkable woman, as given in 'Eyrbyggja,' would seem to indicate that there may have been an error in the age there assigned her, possibly a clerical error; if this is not the fact, it is pretty clear, that the Hebridean Thorgunna of Leif's acquaintance and the Thorgunna of 'Eyrbyggja' cannot be the same person. We are given to understand in the Saga of Eric the Red, that the woman of Leif's intrigue was a woman out of the ordinary rank; we are also told, that Leif gave her many precious bits of finery, among the rest a gold ring, and a mantle of wadmál. The Thorgunna of 'Eyrbyggja' was certainly an extraordinary woman, and was distinguished also for the apparel and ornaments which she possessed. The parallelism is sufficiently striking to point to the possibility, that the Thorgunna of 'Eyrbyggja' was the Thorgunna of Eric's Saga, who had, perhaps, come to Iceland to seek a passage to Greenland, in pursuance of her intention as announced to Leif at their parting. It is stated in Eric's Saga to have been rumoured, that Thorgunna's son came to Iceland in the summer before the Fródá-wonder. The Thorgunna of the Eyrbyggja Saga arrived in Iceland the summer before this 'wonder,' which indeed, owed its origin to her coming, but there is no mention in this saga of her having had a son, a singular omission, truly, if it be an omission, in so minute a description as the saga has preserved of this remarkable woman. Finally, it is evident, if Leif's voyage to Norway was made in 999, and the Thorgunna of Leif's intrigue and she of 'Eyrbyggja' are the same, that Thorgunna's son must have been of a very tender age at the time of his mother's arrival in Iceland. In view of these, as well as certain chronological difficulties, which this narrative presents, it seems not improbable that the whole account of Thorgunna and the Fródá-wonder, as contained in 'Eyrbyggja,' was a popular tale interjected in the saga for a reason not now apparent. This tale may well have been builded upon a historical foundation, but the remains of this foundation are not sufficiently well-preserved to enable us to separate accurately the sound from the unsound material<sup>1</sup>.

(35) The Fródá-wonder is the name given to the extraordinary occurrences, which befell at the farmstead of Fródá soon after Thorgunna's death. The 'wonder' began with the appearance of a 'weird-moon,' which was supposed to betoken the death of some member of the family. This baleful prophecy was followed by the death of eighteen members of the household, and subsequently by the nightly apparitions of the dead. The cause of this marvel was attributed to the fact, that the Mistress of Fródá had prevailed upon her husband to disregard Thorgunna's injunction to burn the drapery of her bed; and not until these hangings were burned was the evil influence exorcised, and the ghostly apparitions laid, the complete restoration of the normal condition of affairs being further facilitated by the timely recommendations of a priest, whose services had been secured to that end<sup>2</sup>.

(36) It is not certain what variety of wood is meant; the generally accepted view has been, that it was some species of maple. It has also been suggested that the word maussurr, may be allied to the modern Swedish Masbjörk, veined-birch, German, Maser-birke, and again [cf. Grönl. hist. Mindesm. vol. i. p. 280] to the German Meussdorn, a view which Arngrim Jonsson was the first to advance [Gronlandia, ch. x]. It was believed, that this last-named received its name, 'darumb das diser dorn den Meusen und ratten zu wider ist,' [Boek, Kreuter Buch, ch. cxliij]. The same author writes of this wood: 'ist man fro das man Meussdorn zu Besen bekommen kan, als zu Venedig vnd sunst auf den Meerstetten. Die Meuss vnd Ratten werden mit disen dornen verscheucht' [Hieronymus Boek [Tragus], Kreuter Buch, 1546, p. 347]. It may be, that this or a similar passage suggested to Finn Magnusen and Werlauff the interpretation, 'besom,' 'broom,' which they gave to húsanotra [af møsurtré; cf. note 6]. That the tree called møsur was also indigenous in Norway is in a manner confirmed by a passage in the Short Story of Helgi Thorisson [Pátr Helga Þórissonar], contained in Flatey Book [vol. i. p. 359]: 'One summer these brothers engaged in a trading voyage to Finmark in the north, having butter and pork to sell to the Finns. They had a successful trading expedition, and returned when the summer was far-spent, and came by day to a cape called Vimund. There were very excellent woods here. They went ashore, and obtained some "møsur" wood.' The character of this narrative, and the locality assigned to the 'møsur' trees, affect the trustworthiness of the information. It is reasonably clear, however, that the wood was rare and, whether it grew in Finmark or not, it was evidently highly prized<sup>3</sup>.

(37) Thiodhild is also called Thorhild, and similarly Gudrid is called Thurid. It has been conjectured, that Thorhild and Thurid were the earlier names, which were changed by their owners after their conversion to Christianity, because of the suggestion of the heathen god in the first syllable of their original names<sup>4</sup>.

(38) Such a fall as this of Eric's does not seem to have been generally regarded as an evil omen, if we may be guided by the proverb: 'Fall er farar heill' [Óláfs saga Tryggvasonar, Flateyjarbók. l. c. vol. i. p. 231]. The complete saying is given by Guðmundr Jónsson [Safn af Íslenskum Orðskviðum, Copenh. 1830. p. 100]: 'Fall er fararheill, frá garði en ei í garð,' 'a fall bodes a lucky journey from the house but not toward it.'

(39) The display of an axe seems to have been peculiarly efficacious in laying such fetches. From among numerous similar instances the following incident may be cited: 'Thorgils heard a knocking outside upon the roof; and one night he arose, and taking an axe in his hand, went outside, where he saw a huge malignant spectre standing before the door. Thorgils raised his axe, but the spectre turned away, and directed itself toward the burial-mound, and when they reached it, the spectre turned against him, and they began to wrestle with each other, for Thorgils had dropped his axe<sup>1</sup>.'

(40) Thorfinn Karlsefni's ancestral line was of rare excellence; it is given in Landnáma at rather greater length, but otherwise as here: 'Thord was the name of a famous man in Norway, he was a son of Biorn Byrdusmior,' &c. 'Thord went to Iceland and took possession of Höfdaströnd in Skaga-firth, . . . and dwelt at Höfði [Headland]. Headland-Thord married Fridgerd,' &c. 'They had nineteen children. Biorn was their son, . . . Thorgeir was the second son . . . Snorri was the third, he married Thorhild Ptarmigan, daughter of Thord the Yeller' [Landnáma, pt. iii. ch. x]. Karlsefni's mother is not named in Landnáma. His grandmother's father, Thord the Yeller, was one of the most famous men in the first century of Iceland's history; he it was who established the Quarter-courts.

(41) Álptafjörðr [Swan-firth] is on the southern side of Hvamms-firth, near its junction with Breida-firth, in western Iceland. It is not improbable that the two ships sailed from Breida-firth, the starting-point for so many of the Greenland colonists.

(42) It has been claimed that this Thorhall, Gamli's son, was no other than the Thorhall, Gamli's son, of Grettis Saga. [Cf. Vigfusson and Powell, Icelandic Reader, p. 381; Storm, Studier over Vinlandsreiserne, p. 305. The latter author calls attention, in his treatise, to Vigfusson's confusion of Thorhall the Huntsman with Thorhall, Gamli's son.] In the vellum manuscript AM. 152 fol., Grettis Saga, p. 6 b, col. 23, we read of a Thorvallr [sic] Vindlendingr, and in the same manuscript of a Thorhall, son of Gamli Vinlendingr [p. 17 b, col. 68]. In the Grettis Saga of the vellum AM. 551 a, 4to, in corresponding passages, we read first of a Thoralldr [sic] Vinlendingr, and subsequently of Thorhall, a son of Gamli Vidlendingr. Again, in the parchment manuscript AM. 556 a, 4to, we find mention [p. 11, ll. 6-7] of a Thorhalldr Vidlendingr, and in the same manuscript [p. 23, l. 11] of Thorhall, a son of Gamli Vidlendingr. From these passages it would appear that both Thorhall and his father Gamli are called Vindlendingr, Vidlendingr, and, once, Vinlendingr. This, in itself, would appear to preclude the conjecture that this Thorhall received the appellation, Vínlendingr [Winelander], because of his visit to Wineland, for his father had possessed the same title before him; moreover the Thorhall, Gamli's son, of the Saga of Eric the Red, is said to be an Eastfirth man, while the Thorhall of Grettis Saga belonged to a northern family living at Hrútafirth, in the Húnaflói. We find from the probable chronology of Grettis Saga that Thorhall's son was married, and living at Melar, in Hrútafirth, in 1014. [Cf. Tímatil í Íslendinga Sögum, p. 473.] If the Thorhall who went to Wineland was a young man and unmarried, as is not improbable, it is manifest that he could not have had a married son living in Iceland in 1014, and chronologically it would then appear to be impossible to identify the Thorhall, Gamli's son of Grettis Saga, with the man of the same name in Eric's Saga; this is, of course, purely conjectural, but from the other data previously cited, it would appear to be pretty clearly established, that the Thorhall, Gamli's son of Grettis Saga, was called after his father Vindlendingr [Wendlander], and that he was an altogether different man from the Thorhall, Gamli's son, of the Saga of Eric the Red.

(43) The celebration of Yule was one of the most important festivals of the year, in the North, both in heathen and in Christian times. Before the introduction of Christianity, it was the central feast of three, which were annually held. Of the significance of these three heathen ceremonials, we read: 'Odin established in his realm those laws, which had obtained with the Ases . . . At the beginning of winter a sacrificial banquet was to be held for a good year [til árs], in mid-winter they should offer sacrifice for increase [til gróðrar], and the third [ceremonial], the sacrifice for victory, was to be held at the beginning of summer [at sumri].' [Ynglinga Saga, 'Lagasetning Óðins,' in Heimskringla, ed. Unger, Chr'a., 1868, p. 9.] As to the exact time of the holding of the Yule-feast, it is stated in the Saga of Hacon the Good: 'He established the law, that the keeping of Yule should be made to conform to the time fixed by Christians, and every one should then stand possessed of a measure of ale, or should pay the equivalent, and should hold the whole Yule-tide sacred. Before this Yule began with [lit. had been kept on] "høku" night, which was the mid-winter night, and Yule was kept for three nights.' [Saga Hákonar góða, in Heimskringla, ed. Unger, p. 92.] The heathen Yule seems not to have coincided exactly with the Christian Christmas festival, and hence the change adopted by Hacon, who was a Christian, and who hoped, no doubt, to aid the propagation of his faith by thus blending the two festivals. Of the manner in which the three heathen festivals were transformed into Christian holidays by those who had experienced a change of faith, we read: 'There was a man named Sigurd. . . . He was accustomed, while heathendom survived, to hold three sacrifices every winter; one at the beginning of winter [at vetrnóttum], a second at mid-winter, a third at the beginning of summer [at sumri]. But when he accepted Christianity, he still retained his old custom regarding the feasts. He gave a great banquet to his friends in the autumn; a Yule-feast in the winter, to which he also invited many persons; the third banquet he held at Easter, and to this also he invited many guests.' [Saga Óláfs hins helga, in Heimskringla, ed. Unger, p. 351-52.] We learn from the Saga of the Foster-brothers, that the celebration of the Yule-tide in this fashion, was of rare occurrence in Greenland, ['því at sjaldan var Jóladykkja á Groenlandi.' Fóstbræðra Saga, Copenh. 1822, p. 138. Konrad Gíslason's edition of the same saga has: 'því at hann vil jóladykkju hafa, ok gera sér þat til ágætis—því at sjaldan voro drykkjur á Grenlandi,' 'for he desired to give a Yule-wassail, and get himself fame thereby,—for they seldom had drinking-bouts in Greenland.' Fóstbræðra Saga, Copenh. 1852, p. 84.]

(44) Freydis also accompanied the expedition, as appears further on in the saga.

(45) This passage is one of the most obscure in the saga. If the conjecture as to the probable site of the Western Settlement, in the vicinity of Godthaab is correct, it is not apparent why Karlsefni should have first directed his course to the north-west, when his destination lay to the south-west. It is only possible to explain the passage by somewhat hazardous conjecture. Leif may have first reached the Western Settlement on his return from the voyage of discovery, and Karlsefni, reversing Leif's itinerary, may have been led to make the Western Settlement his point of departure; or there may have been some reason, not mentioned in the saga, which led the voyagers to touch first at the Western Settlement. [Prof. Storm would argue from the situation of Lýsu-firth, the home of Gudrid's first husband in that Settlement, that the expedition may have set sail from there. Cf. Storm, Studier over Vinlandsreiserne, pp. 326-8. In this place Storm calls attention to the fact, that Thorstein Ericsson's unsuccessful voyage was directed from Eric's-firth, which lay considerably farther to the eastward than the Western Settlement, and that he would therefore be less apt to hit the land, than Karlsefni who sailed from the Western Settlement.] The language of EsR. would admit of the conclusion, that the Bear Islands were not far removed from the Western Settlement ['til Vestri-bygdar ok til Biarmeyia' [sic]]; the statement of ÞsK., however, which speaks of Bear Island [in the singular] seems to indicate that the point of departure was not immediately contiguous to that settlement ['til Vestri-bygðar ok þaðan til Biarneyiar'].

(46) Dægr is thus defined in the ancient Icelandic work on chronometry called Rímbeгла: 'In the day there are two "dægr;" in the "dægr" twelve hours.' This reckoning, as applied to a sea-voyage, is in at least one instance clearly confirmed, namely in the Saga of Olaf the Saint, wherein it is stated that King Olaf sent Thorarin Nefiolfsson to Iceland: 'Thorarin sailed out with his ship from Drontheim, when the King sailed, and accompanied him southward to Mœri. Thorarin then sailed out to sea, and he had a wind which was so powerful and so favourable [hraðbyrr], that he sailed in eight "dægr" to Eyrar in Iceland, and went at once to the Althing.' [Saga Óláfs konungs ens helga, ed. Munch and Unger, Chr'a., 1853, pp. 125-6.] Thorarin's starting-point was, doubtless, not far from Stad, the westernmost point of Norway, the Eyrar, at which he arrived, probably, the modern Eyrar-bakki, in southern Iceland, the nearest harbour to the site of the Althing. The time which was consumed in this phenomenal voyage is confirmed by Thorarin's words on his arrival at the Althing: 'I parted with King Olaf, Harold's son, four nights ago' [Óláfs saga hins helga, l. c. p. 126]. It is tolerably clear from this passage, that this could not have been a normal voyage, and yet we are told in Landnáma, that from Stad, in Norway, to Horn, on the eastern side of Iceland, is seven 'dægra-sigling' [a sail of seven 'dægr']. In the same connection it is also stated, that from Snowfells-ness the shortest distance to Hvarf in Western Greenland, is a sail of four 'dægr;' from Reykianess, on the southern coast of Iceland, southward to Jölduhlaup in Ireland is five [some MSS. have three] 'dægr' of sea [Landnáma, pt. i. ch. i]. These and similar statements elsewhere, have led many writers to the conclusion, that the word 'dægr' may also indicate a longer period than twelve hours, and possibly the same as that assigned to dagr, a day of twenty-four hours. The meaning of the word is not so important to enable us to intelligently interpret the saga, as is the determination of the distance, which was reckoned to an average 'dægr's' sail; that is to say, the distance which, we may safely conclude, was traversed, under average conditions, in a single 'dægr' by Icelandic sailing craft. It seems possible to obtain this information with little difficulty. The sailing distance, as given in Landnáma, from Reykianess to Ireland, may best be disregarded because of the confusion in the manuscripts; the sailing distance from Snowfells-ness to Hvarf in Greenland gives rather better data, although it is only possible to determine approximately the site of Hvarf; but the distance from Stad in Norway to Cape Horn in Iceland, can be determined accurately, and as this was the voyage, with which Icelanders were most familiar, it affords us a trustworthy standard of measurement, from which it is possible to determine the distance which was traversed in a sail of one 'dægr;' and the discussion of the mooted question, whether the 'dægr' of Rimbegla, and of King Olaf the Saint's Saga is the same as that of Landnáma, is not material to this determination. Having regard to the probable course sailed from Norway to Iceland, it would appear that a 'dægr's' sail was approximately one hundred and eight miles. This result precludes the possibility, that any point in Labrador could have been within a sailing distance of two 'dægr' from the Western Settlement. It has been noted that there are variations in the different manuscripts touching the comparatively little known voyage from Iceland to Ireland; if, similarly, there may have been such a variation in EsR, for example, 'tvau' (two) having been written for the somewhat similar 'fiau' (seven), of an elder text, it then becomes apparent that the distance could have been traversed in a sail of seven 'dægr.' Such corruption might have taken place because of lack of accurate knowledge to correct the error at the time in which our MSS. were written. The winds appear to have been favourable to the explorers; the sail of seven 'dægr' 'to the southward,' from Greenland with the needful westerling, would have brought Karlsefni and his companions off the Labrador coast. Apart from this conjecture, it may be said that the distance sailed in a certain number of 'dægr' (especially where such distances were probably not familiar to the scribes of the sagas), seem in many cases to be much greater than is reconcilable with our knowledge of the actual distances traversed, whether we regard the 'dægra' sail as representing a distance of one hundred and eight miles or a period of twenty-four hours.

(47) This may well have been the keel of one of the lost ships belonging to the colonists who had sailed for Greenland with Eric the Red a few years before; the wreckage would naturally drift hither with the Polar current<sup>1</sup>.

(48) MS. Skotzka, lit. Scotch. This word seems to have been applied to both the people of Scotland and Ireland. The names of the man and woman, as well as their dress, appear to have been Gaelic, they are, at least, not known as Icelandic; the minute description of the dress, indeed, points to the fact that it was strange to Icelanders.

(49) Enn rauðskeggjaði, i.e. Thor. It has been suggested, that Thorhall's persistent adherence to the heathen faith may have led to his being regarded with ill-concealed disfavour<sup>2</sup>.

(50) There can be little doubt that this 'self-sown wheat' was wild rice. The habit of this plant, its growth in low ground as here described, and the head, which has a certain resemblance to that of cultivated small grain, especially oats, seem clearly to confirm this view. The explorers probably had very slight acquaintance with cultivated grain, and might on this account more readily confuse this wild rice with wheat. There is not, however, the slightest foundation for the theory, that this 'wild wheat' was Indian corn, a view which has been advanced by certain writers. Indian corn was a grain entirely unknown to the explorers, and they could not by any possibility have confused it with wheat, even if they had found this corn growing wild, a conjecture for which there is absolutely no support whatever. 'Om den Hvede, som Nordmændene i Aaret 1000 fandt vildtvoxende i Vinland,' in Forhandling i Videnskabets-Selskab, Chr'a., 1859, pp. 21-30.] The same observation as that made by the Wineland discoverers was recorded by Jacques Cartier five hundred years later, concerning parts of the Canadian territory which he explored. Of the Isle de Bryon we have this description, 'Nous la trouuames plaine de beaulx arbres, champs de blé sauuaige,' &c., and in the same narrative, with reference to another portion of the discovery, we are informed that the explorers found 'blé sauuaige, comme seille, quel il semble y abouir esté semé et labouré.' [Relation Originale du Voyage de Jacques Cartier au Canada en 1534, ed. Michelant and Ramé, Paris, 1867, pp. 19 and 25.] It is no less true that this same explorer found grapes growing wild, in a latitude as far north as that of Nova Scotia, and, as would appear from the record, in considerable abundance: 'Après que nous feusmes arriuez avec noz barques ausdictz nauires & retournez de la riuyere sainte Croix, le cappitaine Minanda apprestes lesdictes barques pour aller à terre à la dicte yslé veoir les arbres qui sembloient fort beaulx a veoir, & la nature de la terre d'icelle yslé. Ce que fut fait, & nous estans à ladicte yslé la trouuames plaine de fors beaulx arbres de la sorte des nostres. Et pareillement y trouuames force vignes, ce que n'auyons veu par cy deuant a toute la terre, & par ce la nommasmes l'ysle de Bacchus.' D'Avezac, Paris, 1863, p. 14 b and 15.*] Again, in the following century, we have an account of an exploration of the coast of Nova Scotia, in which the following passage occurs: 'all the ground betweene the two Riuers was without Wood, and was good fat earth hauing seuerall sorts of Berries growing thereon, as Gooseberry, Straw-berry, Hyndberry, Raspberry, and a kinde of Red-wine-berry: As also some sorts of Graine, as Pease, some eares of Wheat, Barley, and Rye, growing there wild,' &c. (51) Helgir fiskar, lit. 'holy fish.' The origin of the name is not known. Prof. Maurer suggests that it may have been derived from some folk-tale concerning St. Peter, but adds that such a story, if it ever existed, has not been preserved<sup>1</sup>.

(52) It is not clear what the exact nature of these staves may have been. Hauk's Book has for the word translated 'staves,' both 'triom' and 'trionum,' AM. 557 has 'trianum.' The word trjónum has the meaning of 'snout,' but the first form of the word, as given in Hauk's Book, 'triom,' i. e. trjóm [trjám], seems to be the correct form [from tré, trec]. These 'staves' may have had a certain likeness to the long oars of the inhabitants of Newfoundland, described in a notice of date July 29th, 1612: 'They haue two kinde of Oares, one is about foure foot long of one peece of Firre; the other is about ten foot long made of two peeces, one being as long, big and round as a halfe Pike made of Beech wood, which by likelihood they made of a Biskin Oare, the other is the blade of the Oare, which is let into the end of the long one slit, and whipped very strongly. The short one they use as a Paddle, and the other as an Oare.' [Purchas his Pilgrimes, London, 1625, vol. iv. p. 1880.]

(53) The white shield, called the 'peace-shield' [fríðskjöldr], was displayed by those who wished to indicate to others with whom they desired to meet that their intentions were not hostile, as in Magnus Barefoot's Saga, 'the barons raised aloft a white peace-shield' [Saga Magnús berfœtts, in Codex Frisianus, ed. Unger, Chr'a., 1869, p. 267]. The red shield, on the other hand, was the war-shield, a signal of enmity, as Sinfiotli declares in the Helgi song, 'Quoth Sinfiotli, hoisting a red shield to the yard, . . . "tell it this evening, . . . that the Wolfings are come from the East, lusting for war."' [Cf. Helga kvíða Hundingsbana, in Eddalieder, ed. Finnur Jónsson, Halle o. S. 1890, Pt. II, verses 34-5, pp. 4 and 5.] The use of a white flag-of-truce for a purpose similar to that for which Snorri recommended the white shield, is described in the passage quoted in note 52, 'Nouember the sixt two Canoas appeared, and one man alone coming towards vs with a Flag in his hand of a Wolfes skin, shaking it and making a loud noise, which we tooke to be for a parley, whereupon a white Flag was put out, and the Barke and Shallop rowed towards them.' [Purchas his Pilgrimes, l. c. vol. iv. p. 1880.]

(54) The natives of the country here described were called by the discoverers, as we read, Skrælingjar; since this was the name applied by the Greenland colonists to the Eskimo, it has generally been concluded that the Skrælingjar of Wineland were Eskimo. Prof. Storm has recently pointed out that there may be sufficient reason for caution in hastily accepting this conclusion, and he would identify the inhabitants of Wineland with the Indians [Beothuk or Micmac], adducing arguments philological and ethnographical to support his theory<sup>1</sup>. The description of the savages of Newfoundland, given in the passage in Purchas' 'Pilgrims,' already cited, offers certain details, which coincide with the description of the Skrellings, contained in the saga. These savages are said by the English explorers to be 'full-eyed, of a black colour; the colour of their hair was diuers, some blacke, some browne, and some yellow, and their faces something flat and broad.' Other details, which are given on the same authority, have not been noted by the Icelandic explorers, and one statement, at least, 'they haue no beards<sup>2</sup>,' is directly at variance with the saga statement concerning the Skrellings seen by the Icelanders on their homeward journey. The similarity of description may be a mere accidental coincidence, and it by no means follows that the English writer and Karlsefni's people saw the same people, or even a kindred tribe.

(55) John Guy, in a letter to Master Slany, the Treasurer and 'Counsell' of the Newfoundland Plantation, writes: 'the doubt that haue bin made of the extremity of the winter season in these parts of New-found-land are found by our experience causelesse; and that not onely men may safely inhabit here without any neede of stoue, but Nauigation may be made to and fro from England to these parts at any time of the yeare. . . . Our Goates haue liued here all this winter; and there is one lustie kidde, which was yeaned in the dead of winter.' [Purchas his Pilgrimes, vol. iv. p. 1878.] 'Captaine Winne' writes, on the seventeenth of August, 1622, concerning the climate of Newfoundland: 'the Winter [is] short & tolerable, continuing onely in Ianuary, February and part of March: the day in Winter longer then in England: . . . Neither was it so cold here the last Winter as in England the ycere before. I remember but three seuerall dayes of hard weather indeed, and they not extreame neither: for I haue knowne greater Frosts, and farre greater Snowes in our owne Countrey.' (56) Einfœtingr, i. e. a One-footer, a man with one leg or foot. In the Fatey Book Thorvald's death is less romantically described. The mediæval belief in a country in which there lived a race of one-legged men, was not unknown in Iceland, for mention is made in Rímbegla, of 'a people of Africa called One-footers, the soles of whose feet are so large, that they shade themselves with these against the heat of the sun when they sleep.' [Rímbegla, l. c. p. 344.] This fable seems to have been derived, originally, from Ctesias: ['Item hominum genus, qui Monosceli [Monocoli] vocarentur, singulis cruribus, miræ pernicitatis ad saltum: eosdemque Sciapodas vocari, quod in maiori aestu humi iacentes resupini, umbra se pedum protegant: non longe eos a Troglodytis abesse,' [Ctesias Cnidii quæ supersunt, ed. Lion, Göttingen, 1823, p. 264], and was very widely diffused [cf. C. Plinius Secundus, Naturalis Historia, lib. vii, ch. 2; Aulus Gellius, Noctes Atticæ, lib. ix, iv, 9; C. Jul. Solinus, Polyhistor, ch. lxxv, &c.] It is apparent from the passages from certain Icelandic works already cited [pp. 15, 16, ante], that, at the time these works were written, Wineland was supposed to be in some way connected with Africa. Whether this notice of the finding of a Uniped in the Wineland region may have contributed to the adoption of such a theory, it is, of course, impossible to determine. The reports which the explorers brought back of their having seen a strange man, who, for some reason not now apparent, they believed to have but one leg, may, because Wineland was held to be contiguous to Africa, have given rise to the conclusion that this strange man was indeed a Uniped, and that the explorers had hit upon the African 'land of the Unipeds.' It has also been suggested<sup>1</sup> that the incident of the appearance of the 'One-footer' may have found its way into the saga to lend an additional adornment to the manner of Thorvald's taking-off. It is a singular fact that Jacques Cartier brought back from his Canadian explorations reports not only of a land peopled by a race of one-legged folk, but also of a region in those parts where the people were 'as white as those of France;'; 'Car il (Taignoagny) nous a certiffié auoir esté à la terre de Saguenay, en laq̃lle y a infini or, rubis & aultres richesses. Et y sont les hoïmes blancs comme en France & accoutrez de dras de laynes. . . . Plus dict auoir esté en autre pais de Picquemyans & autres pais, ou les gens n'out que vne iambe.' [Voyage de I. Cartier, ed. d'Avezac, Paris, 1863, p. 40 b.]

(57) These words, it has been supposed, might afford a clue to the language of the Skrellings, which would aid in determining their race. In view not only of the fact, that they probably passed through many strange mouths before they were committed to writing, but also that the names are not the same in the different manuscripts, they appear to afford very equivocal testimony. Prof. Storm with reference to these names, which he cites thus, Avalldamon, Avaldidida, Vætilldi and Uvæge, says, that, while the information they afford is very defective: 'So much seems to be clear, that in their recorded form, they [these words] cannot be Eskimo, for d is entirely wanting in Eskimo, and even g is rare except as a nasal sound [he refers: Fr. v. Müller, Grundriss der Sprachwissenschaft, ii. 164]; Avalldamon especially cannot be Eskimo, for Eskimo words must either end with a vowel, or one of the mute consonants b, k, [q], t, p. . . . Especially is the soft melody of these Skrelling-words altogether different from the harsh guttural sounds of the Eskimo language. We must therefore refer for the derivation of these words to the Indians, whom we know in this region

in later times. The inhabitants, whom the discoverers of the sixteenth century found in Newfoundland, and who called themselves "Beothuk" [i.e. men], received from the Europeans the name of Red Indians, because they smeared themselves with ochre; they have now been exterminated, partly by the Europeans, partly by the Micmac Indians, who in the last century wandered into Newfoundland from New Brunswick. Of their language only a few remnants have been preserved, but still enough to enable us to form a tolerably good idea of it. This language lacks f, but possesses b, d, g, l, m, n, v as well as the vowels a, e, i, o, u, so that its sounds conform entirely to the requirements of the four Skrelling-words. Unfortunately no glossary for the words father, mother, king, has been preserved, so that a direct comparison is impossible; however, the female name Shanandilhit and the word adadimit [spoon] bear a remarkable resemblance to the ending -didida in Avilldidida, and the words buggishaman or bukashaman [man, boy] and anyemen [bow] may also be compared to the termination -amon in Avalldamon [Ref. Gatchet, two discourses before the Amer. Philos. Society, 19 June, 1885, and 7 May, 1886]. This is, of course, only suggested conjecturally; since the Beothuk seem now to have died out, we shall probably, never succeed in obtaining more accurate results. I must, however, not omit to mention, that the Micmac language [in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick] also has such sounds, as to render it possible that these words might have been derived from them; but the glossaries, which I have examined, and which are much more complete than that of the Beothuk tongue, afford no especial resemblance to the Skrelling-words under consideration.' [Storm, Studier over Vinlandsreise, l. c. pp. 349-51.]

Captain Gustav Holm, of the Danish Navy, whose explorations both upon the east and west coast of Greenland, and whose prolonged residence in that country entitle him to speak with authority, has, at my request, acquainted me with his conclusions respecting the possible resemblance between the Skrelling-words and the Eskimo language, and also with reference to the points of resemblance between the Skrellings of the saga and the present inhabitants of Greenland. These conclusions are as follows:

'1. Although the four names, Vætilldi, Uvægi, Avalldamon and Valdidida have nothing in common with Eskimo words, it cannot be gainsaid that they may be of Eskimo origin, since

- '(a) We do not know whether they have been properly understood and recorded.
- '(b) The different manuscripts of the saga give the names in entirely different forms [e. g. Avalldania instead of Avalldamon].
- '(c) Even if the names have been correctly understood and recorded, there is nothing to prevent their being Eskimo; as illustrative of this, the name-list of East-Greenlanders may be cited, [in 'Den østgrønlandske Expedition,' Copenh. 1888, pt. II, p. 183 et seq.], in which many names, although they are recorded by a Greenlander [my steersman, who was a remarkably intelligent and talented man] have quite as little appearance of being Eskimo as the four under consideration.
- '(d) The Eskimo language has not always the harsh guttural sound which has hitherto been ascribed to it. The Angmagsalik language is, on the contrary, very soft; they use d instead of ts and t, g instead of k, &c. [Cf. Den østgrønlandske Expedition, I. p. 156; II. p. 213.]

'(e) It is not impossible, that the names may have been derived from Eskimo originals. I would mention Uvægi, the father's name, for instance, which name, as recorded, follows that of the mother. "Uve" with the suffix "uvia," signifies in Danish, "hendes Ægtefælle" [i. e. her husband], [vide Kleinschmidt's Grønlandske Ordbog, p. 403]. That "Uvægi" should have any connection with the Greenland word "uve"<sup>1</sup> is, as a matter of course, a mere guess, by which I have sought to point out, that the possibility of Eskimo origin may not be rashly rejected.

'2. The description of the Skrellings would apply to the Eskimo, with the exception, that their eyes cannot be called large, but neither can this be said of the eyes of the North American Indians.

'Even as there are on the north-western coast of North America races which seem to me to occupy a place between the Indian and the Eskimo, so it appears to me not sufficiently proven, that the now extinct race on America's east coast, the Beothuk, were Indians. Their mode of life and belief have many points of resemblance, by no means unimportant, with the Eskimo and especially with the Angmagsalik. It is not necessary to particularize these here, but I wish to direct attention to the possibility, that in the Beothuk we may perhaps have one of the transition links between the Indian and the Eskimo.'

It will be seen that Captain Holm, while he differs from Professor Storm in many of his views, still arrives at much the same conclusion.

(58) The sum of information which we possess concerning White-men's-land or Ireland the Great, is comprised in this passage and in the quotation from Landnåma (ante, p. 11). It does not seem possible from these very vague notices to arrive at any sound conclusions concerning the location of this country. Rafn [Grønlands historiske Mindesmærker, vol. iii. p. 886] concludes that it must have been the southern portion of the eastern coast of North America. Vigfusson and Powell [Icelandic Reader, p. 384] suggest that the inhabitants of this White-men's-land were 'Red Indians;' with these, they say, 'the Norsemen never came into actual contact, or we should have a far more vivid description than this, and their land would bear a more appropriate title.' Storm in his 'Studier over Vinlandsreiserne' (l. c. p. 355-363) would regard 'Greater Ireland' as a semi-fabulous land, tracing its quasi-historical origin to the Irish visitation of Iceland prior to the Norse settlement. No one of these theories is entirely satisfactory, and the single fact which seems to be reasonably well established is that 'Greater Ireland' was to the Icelandic scribes terra incognita.

(59) Staðr í Reynines, the modern Reynistaðr, is situated in Northern Iceland, a short distance to the southward of Skaga-firth. Glaumbær, as it is still called, is somewhat farther south, but hard by.

(60) Thorlak Runolfsson was the third bishop of Skálholt. He was consecrated bishop in the year 1118, and died 1133 [Jón Sigurðsson, 'Biskupa tal á Íslandi,' in Safn til Sögu Íslands, vol. i. p. 30]. Biorn Gilsson was the third bishop of Hólar, the episcopal seat of northern Iceland; he became bishop in 1147, and died in the year 1162. Bishop Biorn's successor was Brand Sæmundsson, 'Bishop Brand the Elder,' who died in the year 1201 [Jón Sigurðsson, Biskupa tal á Íslandi, ubi sup. p. 4]. As AM. 557, 4to, refers to this

Bishop Brand as 'Bishop Brand the Elder,' it is apparent that it, as well as Hauk's Book, must have been written after the second Bishop Brand's accession to his sacred office. Bishop Brand Jonsson, the second Bishop Brand, became Bishop of Hólar in the year 1263, and died in the following year [Biskupa tal, ubi sup. p. 4].

(61) We read concerning the introduction of Christianity into Iceland: 'Thorvald [Kodransson] travelled widely through the southern countries; in the Saxon-land [Germany] in the south, he met with a bishop named Frederick, and was by him converted to the true faith and baptised, and remained with him for a season. Thorvald bade the bishop accompany him to Iceland, to baptise his father and mother, and others of his kinsmen, who would abide by his advice; and the bishop consented.' ['Kristni Saga' in Biskupa Sögur, ed. Vigfusson, Copenh. 1858, vol. i. p. 3.] According to Icelandic annals, Bishop Frederick arrived in Iceland, on this missionary enterprise, in the year 981; from the same authority we learn that he departed from Iceland in 985.

(62) Heriulf or Heriolf, who accompanied Eric the Red to Greenland, was not, of course, the same man to whom Ingolf allotted land between Vág and Reykianess, for Ingolf set about the colonization of Iceland in 874, more than a century before Eric the Red's voyage to Greenland. The statement of Flatey Book is, therefore, somewhat misleading, and seems to indicate either carelessness or a possible confusion on the part of the scribe. Heriulf, Eric the Red's companion, was a grandson of the 'settler' Heriulf, as is clearly set forth in two passages in Landnáma. In the first of these passages the Greenland colonist is called 'Heriulf the Younger' [Landnáma, pt. ii, ch. xiv]; the second passage is as follows: 'Heriolf, who has previously been mentioned, was Ingolf's kinsman and foster-brother, for which reason Ingolf gave him land between Vog and Reykianess; his son was Bard, father of that Heriolf, who went to Greenland and came into the "Sea-rollers."' [Landnáma, pt. iv, ch. xiv.] As has already been stated, there is no mention in Landnáma or other Icelandic saga, save that of the Flatey Book, of Heriulf's son, Biarni. Reykianess, the southern boundary of Heriulf's 'claim,' is at the south-western extremity of Iceland; Vág was, probably, situated a short distance to the north of this cape, on the western coast of the same peninsula.

(63) In the 'King's Mirror' [Konungs Skuggsjá], an interesting Norwegian work of the thirteenth century, wherein, in the form of a dialogue, a father is supposed to be imparting information to his son concerning the physical geography of Greenland, he says: 'Now there is another marvel in the Greenland Sea, concerning the nature of which I am not so thoroughly informed, this is that, which people call "Sea-rollers" [hafgerðingar]. This is likest all the sea-storm and all the billows, which are in that sea, gathered together in three places, from which three billows form; these three hedge in the whole sea, so that no break is to be seen, and they are higher than tall fells, are like steep peaks, and few instances are known of persons who, being upon the sea when this phenomenon befell, have escaped therefrom.' [Speculum regale, ed. Brenner, Munich, 1881, p. 47.] A Danish scholar, in a treatise upon this subject, concludes that the hafgerðingar were earth-quake waves, and that those here celebrated were such tidal-waves caused by an unusually severe earth-quake in the year 986. [Cf. Steenstrup, Hvad er Kongespeilet's 'Havgerdinger?' Copenh. 1871, esp. p. 49.] However this may be, there can be little question that Heriulf experienced a perilous voyage, since out of the large number of ships, which set sail for Greenland at the same time, so few succeeded in reaching their destination.

(64) This has been assumed by many writers to have been Labrador, but the description does not accord with the appearance which that country now presents.

(65) Certainly a marvellous coincidence, but it is quite in character with the no less surprising accuracy with which the explorers, of this history, succeed in finding 'Leif's-booths' in a country which was as strange to them as Greenland to Biarni.

(66) This statement has attracted more attention, perhaps, than any other passage in the account of the Icelandic discovery of America, since it seems to afford data which, if they can be satisfactorily interpreted, enable us to determine approximately the site of the discovery. The observation must have been made within the limits of a region wherein, early in the eleventh century, the sun was visible upon the shortest day of the year between dagmálastaðr and eyktarstaðr; it is, therefore, apparent that if we can arrive at the exact meaning of either dagmálastaðr or eyktarstaðr, or the length of time intervening between these, it should not be difficult to obtain positive information concerning the location of the region in which the observation was made. We are informed by a treatise, inserted in the printed text of Rímbegla, written by Bishop John Arnason, that the method adopted by the ancient Icelanders for the determination of the various periods of the day, was to select certain so-called 'eykt-marks' [eyktamörk] about every dwelling, as, peaks, knolls, valleys, gorges, cairns, or the like, and to note the position of, and course of the sun by day, or the moon and stars by night, with relation to these 'eykt-marks'.<sup>1</sup> The circle of the horizon having been thus artificially divided, in the absence of clocks or watches, certain names were assigned to the position which the sun occupied at, as we should say, certain 'hours' of the day; 'dagmálastaðr,' lit. 'day-meal-stead,' indicates the position of the sun at the 'day-meal,' which was the principal morning meal. We have, unfortunately, no accurate data which might enable us to determine the position of the sun at 'dagmálastaðr;' such information we have, however, concerning 'eykt,' for it is stated, in an ancient Icelandic law-code, that 'if the south-west octant be divided into thirds, it is "eykt" when the sun has traversed two divisions and one is left untraversed' ['þá er eykð er útsuðrsætt er deild í þriðjunga, ok hefir sól gengna tvá hluti, en einn ógenginn;'] Kristinnréttir Þorláks ok Ketils, Copenh. 1775, p. 92. Cf. also Grágás, ed. Finsen, Copenh. 1852, Pt. I, p. 26]. There seems to be little room for question that the 'eykt' of 'Kristinnréttir' and the eyktarstaðr of the Flatey Book are the same, and the statement of 'Kristinnréttir' accordingly affords a clear and concise definition of the position of that point upon the horizon at which the sun set on the shortest day of the year in Wineland, and which the explorers called 'eyktarstaðr.' Nevertheless the rational and simple scientific application of this knowledge has been, until very recently, completely ignored, in the effort to reach, through this definition, the solution of the problem involving the exact clock-time of dagmálastaðr and eyktarstaðr and thus the hour at which the sun rose and set on the shortest Wineland day.

The widely divergent views of the leading writers upon this subject have been concisely summarized by Professor Gustav Storm, in a very able treatise wherein he points out the real value of the information, to be derived from the passage in 'Kristinnréttir.'

With the addition of a few minor details as to authorities, cited by Professor Storm, which additions are here italicized, his summary is as follows :

'The first writer in modern times to seek to determine Wineland's geographical situation was Arngrim Jonsson in "Gronlandia;" he, as well as all subsequent investigators, has employed to this end the passage in the Grœnlendinga-pátr of the Flatey Book, in which mention is made of the duration of the shortest day in Wineland [the passage under consideration]; but as to the significance of this passage many different opinions have been advanced, and, as far as I can see, there seem to be strong objections to them all. Arngrim Jonsson translated "sol in ipso solstitio hyberno, circiter 6 plus minus supra horizontem commoratur;" he writes by way of caution "plus minus" [about], since he adds "sciotericiis enim destituebantur" [Gronlandia, ch. ix, p. 55 of the Latin MS., gl. kgl. Saml. [Royal Library of Copenh.] No. 2876, 4to, but at p. 33, of the Icelandic printed text, heretofore cited, from which latter, however, all qualification is omitted, and the statement reads simply, "the sun could be seen fully six hours on the shortest day," "sva þar matte sol síu um skandveigid sialft vel sex stunder"]. This explanation was, doubtless, only known to the few Danish scholars of the seventeenth century, who had access to Arngrim's "Gronlandia;" it first became more widely disseminated in the Icelandic translation, which was published at Skálholt in 1688. Arngrim's explanation was also accepted by Torfæus in his "Vinlandia" [1705]: "Brumales diés ibi qvam vel in Islandia, vel Gronlandia longiores, ad horam nonam circa solstitia sol oriebatur, tertiam occidit" [Vinlandia, l. c. pp. 6 and 7], although Torfæus remarks that this observation must, on account of the fruitfulness of the country, be regarded as inaccurate, since it points to a latitude of 58° 26'. While his work was in the press Torfæus became acquainted with Peringskiöld's—or more correctly the Icelander, Gudmund Olafsson's—translation in the printed edition of Heimskringla<sup>1</sup>, which he properly enough rejected, but which caused him to undertake a renewed consideration of the subject. With the passage from Grágás [i. e. the passage defining "eykt"] as a basis, he now arrived at the following interpretation of this: "spatium quod sol à meridie in occidentem pereurrit, sex horas requirit, ex quibus singuli trientes duas constituunt, bes desinit in horam quartam pomeridianam." [Vinlandia, Addenda, pp. 6 and 7]. Now if "eykt" be four o'clock, p.m.—and the shortest day accordingly eight hours—Wineland's latitude becomes 49°, i. e. Newfoundland, or the corresponding Canadian coast. This new interpretation became, by reason of the attention which Torfæus' writings attracted in the learned world, most widely disseminated in the last century; thus we find it accepted by the German investigator, J. R. Forster, who concludes that Wineland was either Gander Bay or the Bay of Exploits, in Newfoundland, or on the coast of the northern side of the Gulf of St. Lawrence [49°] [Joh. Reinh. Forster, Geschichte der Entdeckungen und Schiffahrten im Norden, Frankf. 1784, p. 112]; the same interpretation is also accepted by Malte Brun, Précis de la Géographie universelle, Paris, 1812, I. 394. Meanwhile, early in this century, Icelandic scholars began to advance a new view, which has gradually forced its way into general recognition. This view was first suggested by Vice-lawman Páll Vídalín in his unpublished Skýringar<sup>2</sup>, subsequently adopted by Bishop Finnur Jónsson [1772] in his Hist.

<sup>1</sup> 'The day was longer there than in Greenland or Iceland, for the sun had there its hour of increase and the day-meal-stead or place of rising at breakfast-time [about six or seven o'clock] on the shortest day.' Heimskringla, ed. Peringskiöld, vol. i. p. 33. Suhm inclined to this opinion in Kjöbh. Selsk. Skrifter, viii. 80, and believed that Wineland was 'Pennsylvania, Maryland, or perhaps Carolina.'

<sup>2</sup> Vídalín's work was written prior to 1727, but was not published until 1854, when it appeared in Reykjavík under the title, Skýringar yfir Fornyrði Lögbókar þeirrar, er Jónsbók kallast [Commentaries on ancient terms in the law-book called Jónsbók]. The subject under consideration is treated in this work, pp. 56-82.

Ecl. Isl. 153 et seq. [i. e. 153-56 note], it was next approved by Schöning in a note to Heimskringla [Heimskringla, Copenh. 1777, vol. i. p. 309], and in his history of Norway [Norges Riges Historie, Copenh. 1781, vol. iii. 419], and in this century was more elaborately developed by Rafn and Finn Magnusen. The new point of departure in this theory is Snorri's expression in Edda concerning the seasons of the year, "Frá jafndægri er haust til þess er sól sezt í eykðar stað" ["Autumn lasts from the equinox until the sun sets in 'eyktarstaðr,'" Edda Snorra Sturlusonar, Copenh. 1848, vol. i. p. 510]; since it was assumed that the beginning of winter, according to Snorri, coincided, as a matter of course, with the beginning of winter according to the Icelandic calendar [the week from the 11th to the 17th of October], it was found that the sun set at Reykholt [Snorri's home] on the 17th of October at four o'clock; to conform with this, "Eyktarstaðr" was interpreted to mean the end of "Eykt," and "Eykt" became the period of time from 3.30 to 4.30. Now if the sun was above the horizon in Wineland on the shortest day from Dagmál to Eyktarstaðr, a day nine hours in length was obtained, which Prof. Thomas Bugge computed gave a latitude of  $40^{\circ}22'$ , or, according to Rafn and Finn Magnusen, more exactly,  $41^{\circ}24'10''$ . Rafn believed that it followed of a certainty that Wineland was identical with the southern coast of Rhode Island and Connecticut, directly to the westward of Cape Cod. But very serious objections to this theory suggest themselves. When Leif Ericsson—according to the Flatey Book—approached Wineland, he saw at first an island to the northward of the land; he then sailed to the westward into a sound between the island and the land's most northerly cape, and still farther west, they arrived at a river and lake, where they established themselves; the composer of the saga accordingly had in mind a country facing toward the north, and upon whose northern shore Leif and his people established themselves in "Lcifsbúðir." Nevertheless Rafn renders this thus [Annaler for Nord. Oldkyndigh. Copenh. 1840-41, pp. 6 and 16]: "They came to an island, which lay to the east off the land, and sailed into a sound between this island and a cape, which projected toward the east [and north] from the land." [Gustav Storm, Om Betydningen af 'Eyktarstaðr' i Flateybogens Beretning om Vinlandsreiseerne, foredraget i Christiania Videnskabselskab 2den Nov. 1883, pp. 1-4. The article has since been published in Arkiv for Nordisk Filologi, November, 1885.]

Professor Storm, in this same treatise, points out the inaccuracy of Rafn's astronomical calculation, which corrected, would change the latitude to  $42^{\circ}21'$ , the vicinity of Boston, which region does not, however, correspond to the descriptions of the saga. He further shows the error in the interpretation of the passage in Snorri's Edda, upon which this theory is based. The cause of the confusion in these different theories is satisfactorily explained by the following paragraph in Professor Storm's article, the contribution of the astronomer, Mr. Geelmuyden, to whom Professor Storm had submitted the astronomical data for solution:

'For the correct understanding of the passages in the old sagas, wherein these day-marks [i. e. the eyktamörk of Rimbegla] are mentioned, it is of the utmost importance to bear in mind that they were in practical use; nor should it be forgotten that the sun's position above a certain day-mark only gives a certain horizontal projection, and especially it will not do to transfer the stroke of the clock corresponding to a certain day-mark—whether that corresponding to a certain season of the year be taken, or the mean for the entire year—to the similar day-mark at other places on the earth.

'When, therefore, the Greenlanders found, according to the statement in the Flatey

Book, that the sun upon the shortest day "had Dagsmálastaðr and Eyktarstaðr," this does not mean that the sun was visible until a certain hour, for they lacked the means of determining the hour, according to our understanding of the word, but it does mean that the sun was visible in certain horizontal directions which they were experienced in determining.'

Applying the passage in Kristinnréttr to the determination of the position of the sun at sunset, on the shortest day of the year in Wineland, Mr. Geelmuyden concludes that :

'Since Útsuðrsætt is the octant, which has S. W. in its centre, therefore between  $22.5^\circ$  and  $67.5^\circ$  Azimuth, Eyktarstaðr must be in the direction  $22.5^\circ + \frac{2}{3}$  of  $45^\circ = 52.5^\circ$  from the south toward the west. Solving the latitude in which the sun set in this direction on the shortest day [in the eleventh century] we find it to be  $49^\circ 55'$ . Here, therefore, or farther to the south the observation must have been made.'

I am indebted to Capt. R. L. Phythian, U. S. N., Superintendent of the U. S. Naval Observatory, Washington, for the following detailed computation undertaken, at my request, from a brief statement of the problem :

'As the solution of the question you propose depends, of course, upon the interpretation of the data furnished, it is necessary that I should give in detail the process by which the amplitude of the sun is derived from the statement contained in your letter.

"Eyktarstad" is assumed to be the position of the sun in the horizon when setting. The south-west octant you define to be the octant having S.W. as its centre ; its limits, therefore, are S.  $22\frac{1}{2}^\circ$  W. and S.  $67\frac{1}{2}^\circ$  W.

"It is eykt when, the south-west octant having been divided into thirds, the sun has traversed two of these and has one still to go." That is, it is eykt when the point of the horizon is  $30^\circ$  west of S.  $22\frac{1}{2}^\circ$  W., or S.  $52\frac{1}{2}^\circ$  W. From this the sun's amplitude when in this point of the horizon is W.  $37^\circ 30'$  S.

'The sun's declination on the shortest day of the year 1015 was S.  $23^\circ 34' 30''$  [nearly].

'The simple formula for finding the sun's amplitude when in the true horizon is sufficiently accurate for the conditions of this case.

'It is  $\sin A = \sin d \sec L,$ from which  $\sec L = \sin A \operatorname{cosec} d.$

'Solving with the above data :

$$\begin{array}{r} A = -37^\circ 30' \dots \dots \log. \sin. \quad -9.78445 \\ d = -23^\circ 34' 30'' \dots \dots \log. \operatorname{cosec}. \quad -0.39799 \\ L = +48^\circ 56' \dots \dots \log. \sec. \quad +0.18244. \end{array}$$

'If I have been in error in the process by which the amplitude has been arrived at, the substitution of its correct value in the above computation will give the proper latitude.'

This computation was undertaken independently of Mr. Geelmuyden's conclusions, and in reply to my query, evoked by the slight discrepancy in the two results, which was then first brought to his attention, Capt. Phythian writes, as follows :

'The formula by which I computed the latitude is the simplest form that can be employed for the purpose, but was, for reasons that will be mentioned later, deemed sufficiently accurate.

'It assumes that the bearing of the sun was taken when its centre was actually on the horizon, and the latitude is found by the solution of a spherical right-angled triangle. Manifestly the learned Professor has taken into account the effect of refraction, and solved an oblique triangle. By this method, calling the refraction 33', we find the latitude to be  $49^{\circ} 50' \cdot 2$ . The slight difference between this result and that of the Professor [less than 5'] is accounted for by the supposition that he did not assume the same refraction.

'The conditions of this case do not seem to give additional value to a rigorous solution. Since the explorers were on the eastern coast of the continent they must have observed the setting of the sun over land, and probably recorded its bearing before it reached the horizon. In such a case, the introduction of refraction and semi-diameter would lead to a result more in error than the simpler solution.

'The data furnished are not sufficiently definite to warrant a more positive assertion than that the explorers could not have been, when the record was made, farther north than Lat. [say]  $49^{\circ}$ .'

The result, therefore, of the application of Professor Storm's simple and logical treatment to this passage in Flatey Book, 'the sun had there Eyktarstad,' &c., is summed up in Capt. Pythian's statement, 'the explorers could not have been, when the record was made, farther north than Lat. [say]  $49^{\circ}$ ;' that is to say, Winland may have been somewhat farther to the south than northern Newfoundland or the corresponding Canadian coast, but, if we may rely upon the accuracy of this astronomical observation, it is clear that thus far south it must have been.

(67) Kornhjálmr af tré, a wooden granary. The word 'hjálmr' appears to have a double significance. In the passage in the Saga of King Olaf the Saint: 'Wilt thou sell us grain, farmer? I see that there are large "hjálmar" here' [Heimskringla, ed. Unger, p. 353], the word 'hjálmar' may have the meaning of stacks of grain. The use of the word as indicating a house for the storage of grain is, however, clearly indicated in the Jydske Lov of 1241, wherein we read: 'But if one build upon the land of another either a "hialm" or any other house,' &c. ['æn byggær man annænds iord antugh mæth hialm æth mæth nokær andre hus,' &c. Danmarks gamle Provindslove, ed. Thorsen, Copenh. 1853, pp. 79-80]. As there is no suggestion in the saga of the finding of cultivated fields, it is not apparent for what uses a house for the storage of grain could have been intended.

(68) Vígflaki, lit. a war-hurdle. This was a protection against the missiles of the enemy raised above the sides of the vessel. In this instance, as perhaps generally on ship-board, this protecting screen would appear to have been formed of shields attached to the bulwarks, between these the arrow, which caused Thorvald's death, doubtless, found its way.

(69) The Landnámabók makes no mention of this Thori; its language would seem to preclude the probability of a marriage between such a man and Gudrid; the passage with reference to Gudrid being as follows: 'His son was Thorbiorn, father of Gudrid who married Thorstein, son of Eric the Red, and afterwards Thorfinn Karlsefni; from them are descended bishops Biorn, Thorlak and Brand.' Landnáma, pt. ii, ch. xvii.

(70) Námkyrtill [namkirtle] is thus explained by Dr. Valtýr Guðmundsson, in his unpublished treatise on ancient Icelandic dress: 'Different writers are not agreed upon the meaning of "námkyrtill;"' Sveinbjörn Egilsson [Lexicon poet.] interprets it as signifying a kirtle made from some kind of material called 'nám.' In this definition he is followed by Keyser [Nordmændenes private Liv i Oldtiden], and Vigfusson [Dict.]. The Icelandic painter, Sigurðr Guðmundsson ['Um kvennabúninga á Íslandi að fornu og nýju,' in Ný fjelagsrit, vol. xvii], has, on the other hand, regarded the word as allied to the expression: 'at nema at beini' [i.e. fitting close to the leg, narrow], and concludes that 'námkyrtill' should be translated, 'narrow kirtle,' in which view Eiríkr Jónsson [Oldnordisk Ordbog] and K. Weinhold [Altnordisches Leben] coincide.

I cannot agree with either of these interpretations. The mention in Flatey Book is so indefinite, that nothing can be determined from it. On the other hand, the meaning of this word becomes apparent from a passage in Laxdœla Saga, if this be compared with other references to female dress in ancient times, contained in the elder literature. This passage in Laxdœla Saga is as follows: "Guðrun wore a 'námkyrtill' and a close-fitting upper garment [vefjarupphlutr], with a large head-dress; she wore wrapped about her an apron with dark embroidery upon it and fringed at the ends" ["Guðrún var í námkyrtli, ok við vefjarupphlutr þröngur, en sveigr mikill á höfði; hon hafði knýtt um sik blæju ok váru í mörk blá ok tröf fyrir enda."] "Námkyrtill" evidently means here half-kirtle or petticoat, for with it an "upphlutr" [waist] of different stuff is worn, which in Snorra Edda [ii. 494] is called "helfni" [i.e. half-kirtle]. The origin of the word seems to me to have been as follows: In the ordinary woman's gown [kirtle] the upper part, or "upphlutr," was, obviously, much narrower [i.e. closer-fitting] than the lower part of the garment, and was, in consequence, worn out sooner than the lower part. With the better class of people the kirtle was usually made from some foreign stuff of bright colour, especially red. Now when the upper part [upphlutr] was worn out, the wearers, indisposed to abandon the lower part of the garment, which was still serviceable, took [námu] or cut off the lower part, and wore it with an upper garment made from domestic stuff [homespun], the so-called wadmál [vefjarupphlutr]. The lower detached part of the garment or skirt then received the name of "nám" or "námkyrtill" [cf. landnám, órnám] because it had been taken [numið] from the entire kirtle. By the preservation of the serviceable lower part of the garment, with its foreign stuff of showy colour, the dress was rendered more ornamental than it would have been if both the lower and upper portion of the kirtle had been made from wadmál, which it was not easy to obtain, in Iceland, dyed in colours. Such I conclude to have been the origin of the word "nám" or "námkyrtill." The word subsequently continued in use, regardless of the fact whether the skirt or lower half-kirtle, to which it was applied, had been cut from an old kirtle or not<sup>1</sup>.

(71) A 'mörk' was equal to eight 'aurar' [cf. Laxdœla Saga, ch. 26, ed. Kâlund, Copenh. 1889, p. 90]; an 'eyrir' [plur. 'aurar'] of silver was equal to 144 skillings [cf. Vídalín, Skýringar yfir Fornyrði Lögboðkar, Reykjavík, 1854, p. 351]. An 'eyrir' would, therefore, have been equal to three crowns [kroner], modern Danish coinage, since sixteen skillings are equal to one-third of a crown [33½ øre], and a half 'mörk' of silver would accordingly have been equal to twelve crowns, Danish coinage. As the relative value of gold and silver at the time described is not clearly established, it is not possible to determine accurately the value of the half 'mörk' of gold. It was, doubtless, greater at that time, proportionately, than the value here assigned, while the purchasing power of both precious metals was very much greater then than now.

(72) At the time of the 'settlement' of Iceland the homestead of the more prominent 'settler' became the nucleus of a little community. The head of this little community, who was the acknowledged leader in matters spiritual and temporal, was called the 'goði.' With the introduction of Christianity the 'goði' or 'goðorðsmaðr' lost his religious character though he still retained his place of importance in the Commonwealth.

(73) 'Þat var ofarliga á dögum Ólafs hins helga, at Guðleifr hafði kaupferð vestr til Dýflinnar; en er hann sigldi vestan, ætlaði hann til Íslands; hann sigldi fyrir vestan Írland, ok fékk austanveðr ok landnyrðinga, ok rak þá langt vestr í haf ok í útsuðr, svá at þeir vissu ekki til landa; en þá var mjök áliðit sumar, ok hétu þeir mörgu, at þá bæri ór hafinu, ok þá kom þar, at þeir urðu við land varir; þat var mikit land, en eigi vissu þeir hvert land þat var. Þat ráð tóku þeir Guðleifr, at þeir sigldu at landinu, þvíat þeim þótti illt at eiga lengr við hafsmegnit. Þeir féngu þar höfn góða; en er þeir höfðu þar litla stund við land verit, þá koma menn til fundar við þá; þeir kendu þar engan mann, en helzt þótti þeim, sem þeir mælti írsku; brátt kom til þeirra svá mikit fjölmenni, at þat skipti mörgum hundruðum. Þeir tóku þá höndum alla ok bundu, ok ráku þá síðan á land upp. Þá voru þeir færðir á mót eitt, ok dæmt um þá. Þat skildu þeir, at sumir vildu at þeir væri drepnir, en sumir vildu at þeim væri skipt á vistir ok væri þeir þjáðir. Ok er þetta var kært, sjá þeir hvar reið flokkir manna, ok var þar borit merki í flokkinum; þóttust þeir þá vita, at höfðingi nökkurr mundi vera í flokkinum; ok er flokk þenna bar þangat at, sá þeir, at undir merkinu reið mikill maðr ok garpligr, ok var þó mjök á efra aldr ok hvítr fyrir hærnum. Allir menn er þar voru fyrir, hnigu þeim manni, ok fögnuðu sem herra sínum; fundu þeir þá brátt, at þangat var skotið öllum ráðum ok atkvæðum, sem hann var. Síðan sendi þessi maðr eptir þeim Guðleifi; ok er þeir kómu fyrir þenna mann, þá mælti hann til þeirra á norrænu, ok spyrr, hvaðan af löndum þeir voru. Þeir sögðu, at þeir væri flestir íslenzkir. Þessi maðr spurði hverir þeir væri þessir íslenzku menn; gekk Guðleifr þá fyrir þenna mann ok kvaddi hann virðuliga, en hann tók því vel, ok spyrr hvaðan af Íslandi þeir væri, en Guðleifr segir at hann væri ór Borgarfirði; þá spurði hann hvaðan ór Borgarfirði hann var; en Gunnlaugr segir[þat]. Eptir þat spurði hann vandliga eptir sérhverjum hinna stærri manna í Borgarfirði ok Breiðafirði. Ok er þeir töluðu þetta, spyrr hann eptir Snorra goða ok þuríði frá Fróða, systur hans, ok hann spurði vandliga eptir öllum hlutum frá Fróða ok mest at sveininum Kjartani, er þá var bóndi at Fróða. Landsmenn kölluðu í öðrum stað, at nökkurt ráð skyldi gjöra fyrir skipshöfninni. Eptir þat gekk þessi mikli maðr brott frá þeim, ok nefndi með sér xij menn af sínum mönnum, ok sátu þeir langa hrið á tali. Eptir þat géngu þeir til mannfundarins. Þá mælti inn mikli maðr til þeirra Guðleifs: "Vér landsmenn höfum talat nökkut [mál] yðar, ok hafa landsmenn nú gefit yðvart mál á mitt vald, en ek vil nú gefa yðr fararleyfi þangat sem þér vilit fara; en þó yðr þykki nú mjök á liðit sumar, þá vil ek þó ráða yðr, at þér látið á brott heðan, þvíat hér er fólk útrútt ok illt viðreignar: en þeim þykkja áðr brotin lög á sér." Guðleifr mælti: "Hvat skulum vér til segja, ef oss verðr auðit at koma til ættjarða várar, hvern oss hafi frelsi gefit?" Hann svarar: "Þat mun ek yðr eigi segja, þvíat ek ann eigi þess frændum mínum ok fóstbræðrum, at þeir hafi hingat þvílíka ferð, sem þér mundut haft hafa, ef þér nytið eigi mín við; en nú er svá komit aldri mínum," sagði hann, "at þat er á öngri stundu örvænt, nær elli stígr yfir höfuð mér; en þóat ek lífa enn um stundar sakir, þá eru hér á landi ríkari menn en ek, þeir at lítinn frið munu gefa útlendum mönnum, þóat þeir sé eigi hingat nálægir, sem þér erut at komnir. Síðan lét þessi maðr búa skipit með þeim, ok var þar við til þess er byrr kom, sá er þeim var hagstæðr út at taka. En áðr þeir Guðleifr skildu, tók þessi maðr gullhring af hendi sér, ok fær í hendr Guðleifi, ok þar með gott sverð ; en síðan mælti hann við Guðleif : “ Ef þér verðr auðit at koma til fóstr-jarðar þinnar, þá skaltú færa sverð þetta Kjartani, bóndanum at Fróðá, en bringinn Þuríði móður hans.” Guðleifr mælti : “ Hvat skal ek til segja, hverr þeim sendi þessa gripi ? ” Hann svarar : “ Seg, at sá sendi, at meiri vin var húsfreyjunnar at Fróðá en goðans at Helgafelli, bróður hennar. En ef nökkurr þykkist vita þar af, hverr þessa gripi hefir átta, þá seg þau mín orð, at ek banna hverjum manni á minn fund at fara, þvíat þat er en mesta úfæra, nema þeim takist þann veg giptusanliga um landtökuna, sem yðr hefir tekizt ; er hér ok land [vitt ok] illt til hafna, en ráðinn ófriðr allstaðar útlendum mönnum, nema svá beri til sem nú hefir orðit.” Eptir þetta skildu þeir. [Þeir] Guðleifr létu í haf, ok tóku Írland síð um haustið, ok voru í Dýflinni um vetrinn ; en um sumarit sigldu þeir til Íslands, ok færði Guðleifr þá af höndum gripina, ok höfðu allir þat fyrir satt, at þessi maðr hafi verit Björn Breiðvíkingakappi ; en engi önnur sannyndi hafa menn til þess, nema þau sem nú voru sögð.’ Eyrbyggja Saga, ed. Vigfusson, pp. 119-22.

(74) The paper manuscripts founded upon the text of the saga presented in Hauk's Book are as follows :

IN THE ARNA-MAGNÆAN COLLECTION, COPENHAGEN.

No. 118, 8vo. The first page of this manuscript bears the following title : ‘ Hier hefur Grænlan[ds Ann]ál. Er fyrst Saga eðr [His]toria Þorfinns Karlsef[nis] Þordar sonar.’ The saga, which fills twenty-four sheets, was written in the seventeenth century by Björn á Skarðsá. There are certain interpolations in the text, as on p. 15 b, concerning ‘ Helluland hið mikla,’ p. 16, on the origin of the name ‘ Markland,’ and on p. 19 b, concerning the Skrelling boats. With the exception of these inserted passages, and a few minor verbal changes, the text follows closely that of ÞsK.

No. 281, 4to. On the back of p. 83 [modern pagination] of this book is the title : ‘ Hier hefur sögu Þorfinns Kallsefnis Þordarsonar.’ It is a neatly written manuscript, in a hand somewhat resembling the elder vellum hands. On the back of p. 84 the passage from Landnáma : ‘ So segir Ari Þorgylsson ad þat sumar fóru XXII skip,’ &c., together with the list of colonists as given in the Flatey Book text, have been inserted by the scribe, and the fact noted at the bottom of the page. On p. 93 the saga concludes with the words : ‘ Vere Gud med oss,’ as in Hauk's Book, which words are usually omitted from the paper transcripts of ÞsK. It is a good clear copy of the Hauk's Book text, one of the most accurate and useful. It was made by Sigurður Jónsson of Knör toward the close of the seventeenth century. [Cf. AM. Katalog.]

No. 597 b, 4to. In the centre of p. 32 [modern pagination] is the title : ‘ Hier hefur Sögu Þorfinns Kallsefnis Þordarsonar.’ This text, like that of 281, 4to, has the interpolated passage from Landnáma, above noted ; unlike 281, 4to, however, it is a careless copy, and contains many errors, as : ‘ kirtel’ for ‘ kistil,’ ‘ fuller vonn’ for ‘ fulltrúann,’ &c. It contains numerous marginal notes in an old hand, ends on the back of p. 41, and was written [cf. AM. Katalog] in the latter half of the seventeenth century.

No. 768, 4to. At the head of the first page of text of this manuscript is the title : ‘ Hier hefur Grænlands Annal, er fyrst Saga edur Historia Þorfinns Kalls efnis Þordar Sonar.' The saga contains thirty-eight pages, based upon the text of Hauk's Book, although with numerous additions from the narrative of the Flatey Book, as also concerning Helluland it mikla, &c. It is written in German script, dates from the seventeenth century, having belonged, according to Arni Magnusson's conjecture, in 1669, to Bishop Thord, from whom Thormod Torfæus received it. It would appear from a passage on p. 5 of this manuscript, that the scribe had access to Hauk's Book, for he writes: 'Þessir efterfarandi Capituli er einfalldliga efter Hauks Bök skrifadir,' &c.

No. 770 b, 4to. This manuscript contains two sagas written about 1770. The first of these, covering thirty-six pages, bears the title: 'Hier hefur Sögu Þorfinns Karlsefnis Þórdarsonar.' It is an almost literal transcript of the text of ÞsK.

No. 1008, 4to. Near the middle of this book is the saga bearing the title: 'Her hefr vpp sögu þeirra Þorfinnz Karlsefnis oc Snorra Þorbrandz sonar.' In the margin, in an old hand, are the words 'Fordret Mag. Joon Arnesen af AM,' and upon the same page Dr. Gudbrand Vigfusson has written 'eptir Hauksbók.' It is a fair copy of ÞsK, written ca. 1700.

IN THE ROYAL LIBRARY, COPENHAGEN.

No. 1692, 4to [Ny kgl. Saml.]. This copy, written in cursive hand, in the last century, fills one hundred pages, and is entitled: 'Sagan af Þorfinni Karlsefni Þórdar syni.' According to an inserted note, the copy was made by J. Johnsen [Jón Jónsson] from AM. 281, 4to.

No. 1698, 4to [Ny kgl. Saml.]. This saga, which follows closely ÞsK, under the title: 'Her hefur upp Sögu þeirra Þorfinns Karls-Efnis og Snorra Þorbrandssonar,' fills twenty-seven pages of the manuscript, and was written, in German script, probably in the last century. This text is peculiarly interesting because of the variant it has from the words of the original in the passage describing the distance from Bjarneyjar to Helluland, which is thus given in this text: 'þaðan sigldu [þeir] iii dægur,' &c. [Cf. Note 46, p. 174.]

No. 1734, 4to [Ny kgl. Saml.]. This manuscript, while it does not contain ÞsK, does contain certain notabilia concerning Eric the Red, Greenland, the situation of Wineland, Albania [Hvitramannaland], &c., and on pp. 21 et seq. has an account of Þorbjörn, [sic] Kallz Efni. It was written in the last half of the last century by J. Johnson [Jónsson] after AM. 770 b, 4to.

No. 1754, 4to [Thott. Saml.]. This text of the saga, with the title: 'Her hefr upp sögu þeirra Þorfinnz Karlsefnis oc Snorra Þorbrandzsonar,' contains seventy-two pages, copied 'Ex codice vetusto membraneo in Bibl. Acad. Hafn. inter MSS. Arnæ Magnæi, No. 544 in 4to.' As the scribe states, 'there are certain lacunæ here and there in the Codex illegible by reason of smoke and age, which have caused certain lacunæ in this copy;' it is otherwise a good clear copy, in running hand, of ÞsK, made at a time when Hauk's Book was in no better state than at present, as the lacunæ of the copy indicate.

The paper manuscripts founded upon the text [EsR] of AM. 557, 4to, are as follows:

IN THE ARNA-MAGNÆAN COLLECTION.

No. 563 b, 4to. This is an inferior copy from the latter half of the seventeenth century. It is in running hand and contains nineteen pages. According to a slip, in Arni Magnusson's hand, inserted in the manuscript, it has been compared with a copy in quarto 'written by the Rev. Vigfus Gudbrandsson,' and is filled with interlineations and corrections, which bring it to a fair likeness with the text of 557, 4to.

No. 770 b, 4to. The second saga in this manuscript has the title: 'Hier hefst Saga af Eiriki Rauda,' beside which title Arni Magnusson has written 'er miog o correct' ['is very incorrect']. It is an inferior transcript of EsR, in the same hand as that of the text of PsK which precedes it.

No. 931, 4to. At the foot of p. 13 of this manuscript is the title 'Her Byriar Sauguna Af Eyreke Rauda Þorvaldss.' This text covers twenty-two pages, completed, as is stated at the end of the saga, in the year 1734 ['oc likr her þessare søgu þann 3. Januarij Anno 1734']. It is a good clear copy of the text of EsR, omitting, however, the verses of Þorw. [sic] the Huntsman, and the Einfœting ditty.

No. 932, 4to. This collection of sagas was written, as is stated on the title-page, in the year 1821. On p. 268 of the manuscript the 'Saga fra Eyreci Rauda' begins, and is concluded on p. 297. While it follows the text of EsR, certain of the minor errors of that text have been corrected in conformity with the language of PsK.

No. 401, fol. This transcript of the 'Saga Eiriks Rauða' contains forty-four pages in cursive hand, with notes at the foot and in the margin of the text. Originally a close copy of AM. 557, 4to, it has been corrected in many places apparently to conform to the text of PsK. According to the 'Katalog' this copy was made in the latter half of the last century.

No. 30 Rask Coll. The text here presented under the title 'Sagann af Eireke Rauda,' is a rather inexact copy of EsR, written ca. 1770. This text makes Thorvald Ericsson shoot the Uniped, and has such minor variants from the original as 'Þorvalldr var kalladr veidimadr,' 'samtymnis lanþar' in the second line of the second verse, &c.

No. 36 Rask Coll. On p. 116 of this collection of sagas this copy of 'Sagann af Eyrike enum Rauda' begins, and is brought to a conclusion on p. 129. It was written, as is stated at the end of the saga, by Olaf Sigurdsson, and by him completed in January 1810. While it is founded upon EsR, it is rather a paraphrase than a literal copy of that text.

IN THE ROYAL LIBRARY, COPENHAGEN.

No. 1697, 4to [Ny kgl. Saml.]. This text, which fills 115 pages, was copied [probably late in the last century], as is stated in the manuscript, from AM. 563 b, 4to, by J. Johnsson. The scribe has followed the corrected text of the manuscript from which his copy was made.

No. 1714, 4to [Ny kgl. Saml.]. This 'Saga af Eyreke Rauda' contains eighteen pages, written in 1715. While it follows in the main EsR, it is not without minor changes due apparently to the influence of PsK.

No. 1173, fol. [Ny kgl. Saml.]. This manuscript, from the early part of the present century (?), contains both the Icelandic text and a Latin translation of the 'Saga af Eireke Rauda,' derived, as is stated, from AM. 557, 4to, compared with AM. 281 and 563, 4to, and Hauk's Book, together with an excerpt from AM. 770, 8vo.

No. 616, 4to [Kall. Saml.]. The 'Saga Eireks Rauda,' which occupies the ninth place in this collection, fills twelve pages. It is written in a good hand of the early part of the last century, or the end of the seventeenth century, and follows the text of AM. 557, 4to, closely.

No. 1776, 4to [Thott. Saml.]. In this bundle of sagas the text of 'Sagan af Eyreke Rauda' forms a separate tractate. This is a copy of EsR made, probably, in the latter part of the last century, with unimportant variants of the original text as 'Þorvallþr veiþimadr;' in Thorhall's second ditty 'knarrar skurd,' instead of 'knarrar skeið,' &c.

No. 984 a, fol. [Thott. Saml.]. In this collection of folios there are two texts of EsR; one has the title 'Saga Eyreks Rauda,' the other 'Saga af Eyreke Rauda.' The first contains twenty-six pages, following closely the text of AM. 557, 4to, except in the omission of the stanzas of Þorvald [sic] the Huntsman, and that which refers to the Uniped. The second text contains twenty-eight pages, and, like the first, is a close copy of the text of AM. 557, 4to, except, in this case, in the orthography. Both transcripts appear to have been made in the latter half of the last century.

IN THE BRITISH MUSEUM LIBRARY.

No. 11,123. At the end of this quarto manuscript are fifty-three pages, in running hand, containing 'Sagan af Eirike Rauða.' This saga is a fairly literal transcript of the text of EsR. It is preceded by a woodcut of Eric the Red, being the same as that contained in Arngrim Jonsson's 'Gronlandia,' and is followed by a few pages of 'Annals' and notes, the concluding notice bearing the title 'Af Þorbirni Karlsefni,' with the entry, at the end, written at Borgartún, 1775, by Oddr Jónsson.

No. 11,126. This is a folio manuscript of thirty-seven pages. On an inserted fly-leaf is the note 'Saga Eiriks Rauda ex membrana in Arnæ Magnæi Bibliotheca in 4to, Num. 557.' There are a few marginal corrections of the clerical errors of AM. 557, 4to, as 'skridu' for 'skylldu,' 'fundu kiol' for 'fengu skiol,' &c., and a few lacunæ in the transcript where the scribe has not been able to read the words of the vellum. According to the Manuscript Catalogue, this copy was made in Copenhagen in 1768 by Odd Jónsson. Both 11,123, and 11,126 are from the collection of Finn Magnúsen.

No. 4,867 [Banks Coll.]. A manuscript in folio containing many sagas, of which the third in the collection is 'Sagann af Eyreke Ravda,' which fills sixteen pages, and is a fairly accurate copy of the text of AM. 557, 4to, written, as would appear from an entry at the end of the saga, in 1691.

In addition to these paper manuscripts of the text of EsR there are others in the National Library of Reykjavík [143, 4to, 150, 4to, and 151, 4to], and one in the Royal Library of Stockholm, which I have not found it possible to examine. The text of the Stockholm manuscript, No. 35, fol., conforms to that of AM. 557, 4to [cf. Arwidsson, Förteckning öfver Kongl. Bibliothekets i Stockholm Isländska Handskrifter, Stockholm, 1848, pp. 66-7], and it is not probable that the Reykjavík manuscripts offer any peculiarities differing from those exhibited by the paper transcripts above mentioned.

Of the Wineland history of the Flatey Book there is in the Arna-Magnæan Collection a paper copy of the Saga of Olaf Tryggvason, being No. 57, fol., which contains the Þáttir Eireks Rauda' [pp. 1064-73, new pagination 533 b-38], as well as the 'Grænlandinga þáttir' [pp. 1361-94, new pagination 682-98 b]. This is a literal transcript of the narrative of the Flatey Book.

It seems safe to conclude that the texts of all these paper manuscripts are derived, directly or indirectly, from the vellum manuscripts which have been preserved, and of which facsimiles are here given. In the numerous transcripts of the texts of EsR and ÞsK there are no passages which indicate an origin other than the two vellum manuscripts, AM. 544 and 557, 4to, and the numerous variants from these originals have, in all likelihood, arisen either through the editorial care or clerical carelessness of the scribes of these transcripts.
